52532. That is a possible way of getting over the difficulty you have in your mind and the difficulty I have in my mind. Your suggestion is that the officer who makes the charge should note down what the prisoner says in answer to the charge, and that the Inspector who takes the charge should initial the entry in the book?—Yes.

52533. Then he could be called to confirm it if the Magistrate required it?—Yes.

Mr. JAMES TIMEWELL, sworn.

Mr. J. Timewell.

31 July 1907.

52534. (Chairman.) You are Secretary to a society called the Police and Public Vigilance Society?—Yes.

52535. When was that society formed?—In 1902.

52536. You have been Hon. Secretary to the society ever since it was established?—Yes.

52537. We only got your proof on the 24th inst., and we know that you have been busy helping people in getting their proofs ready, so that we can quite understand and make allowance for the fact of your sending your proof so late. I may also tell you what we have written to you that we hardly contemplated that you would seek to give evidence, because you have been acting as a kind of solicitor to many of the complainants whose cases we have heard, and you have rendered us great assistance in that capacity, but seeing that you desire to give evidence, we are willing that you shall give extra general evidence, and make such recommendations as you suggest on behalf of your society we should adopt. You know our terms of reference, and I will ask you the questions which I put to the other expert witnesses like the Magistrates, or to some of them. Have you any observations to make as to what are the duties of constables and other officers of the police force?—As to what are their duties?

52538. Yes. That is the first branch of our inquiry?—I have sent in certain suggestions. Do they not cover the ground?

52539. You can give your answer to that first question in the form of suggestions later on?—Yes.

52540. The next question I have to put to you is whether or not in your opinion the police officers discharge their duties, as a rule, with discretion, with honesty, and with efficiency?—I am very sorry to say that I do not think they do.

52542. We have heard the evidence in that case. All that we are inviting you to do now is to give general evidence?—Yes. My point was that in that particular case a policeman was called to a public-house to deal with people who were causing trouble in the public-house.

52543. I do not think we can take the particular facts in any particular case from you at this stage of the inquiry. We have heard all the evidence about the Wilson case, and that case is closed?—I was only referring to it to illustrate my point. I first of all say I believe a very large number of the cases brought into Court are brought into Court through unnecessary interference by the police.

52544. Quite. That is your opinion?—Yes.

52545. We take note of that?—I want, if I may be allowed to do so, to give you that one case to illustrate what I mean.

52546. We have got it before us. I do not think we can have that. You say the police are over-zealous in the discharge of their duty, or that they arrest people unnecessarily. You say they exercise their powers of summary arrest indiscreetly. Is that what you mean?—My point is they are often called to deal with one set of people, and by the time the policemen arrive the persons they are called upon to deal with have disappeared, and the policemen rather than go back without a charge will take an innocent person or two.

52547. You think that takes place?—Yes.

52548. What is the next point?—Then, having done that, they will, as it has been stated in newspapers, secure a conviction by some means or other. If they have not got sufficient evidence, or if there is not a sufficient number of policemen to secure a conviction, they will get their comrades, even although they were not present, to give evidence in support of the charge, and so obtain a conviction against an innocent person.

52549. Then, in that case, if a conviction is obtained, the Magistrate is in fault. He has come to a wrong decision, has he not?—If the evidence is given by four or five or six policemen, and there are only two other, you may say, indifferent witnesses, you can hardly blame the Magistrate, can you?

52550. I take it if the Magistrate comes to a wrong decision he may be blamed?—He can only come to the decision that the evidence will allow him to come to. To begin with, the police officers are expert witnesses, and generally most ordinary people would accept the evidence of one policeman as against two inexperienced persons who do not know how to give evidence; and consequently you cannot blame the Magistrate. My idea is that you should blame the officers who encourage and do this sort of thing.

52551. That amounts to this. I understand you think a great deal of the evidence given in Police Courts by police constables is untrue?—Yes, I am sure of it.

52552. And that the Police Magistrates are misled. Is that it?—Yes.

52553. Do you not think it is rather extraordinary that experienced Magistrates should be misled continually?—No, I do not. They never dream of the things being done that are done.

52554. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not understand what you said just now about policemen being encouraged by the officers to do it?—I say they are generally encouraged to get cases and to secure convictions.

52555. Encouraged by whom?—By their superior officers. I have had it from policemen themselves, so I know, and I can assure you that that is a very serious grievance for policemen who do not want to give false evidence.

52556. (Chairman.) Do you mean to suggest that promotion is determined at all by the number of charges that a constable makes?—Yes.

52557. What makes you think that?—For instance, not very long ago a gentleman who was Mayor of St. Pancras, a man whose word one might accept, assured me that he knew a thoroughly good man who did his work honestly and straightforwardly——

52558. As I understand it, you are going to give us now, in support of your opinion, an opinion that was expressed by the Mayor of St. Pancras?—Yes, by an ex-Mayor.

52559. I do not think we can attach any importance to that. The ex-Mayor of St. Pancras might have come before us if he had any special knowledge about the police, and we should have been quite ready and willing to hear what he had to say?—He only told me quite casually that this man after serving seven years in the police force had been——

52560. We cannot take hearsay evidence of that kind even in receiving what is called general evidence. You have expressed your opinion. You say you think policemen are encouraged to make unnecessary charges?—Yes. I have had it from the mouths of policemen themselves.

52561. In what other respects are the police guilty of misconduct, in your opinion?—I think the most serious matter that we ought to consider is the persistent drinking on the sly of policemen. I think that is the most serious matter we have to contend with. They have regular places of call at all hours of the day and at all hours of the night where they drink on the sly—at public-houses, at general shops, at receiving offices, and at all sorts of places and I think it is quite a common thing for policemen between the hours of 10 and 12 at night to get six or eight, or even nine drinks before midnight.

52562. While they are on duty?—While they are on duty. My contention is that 50 per cent. of the night duty men are more or less under the influence of drink, and many are quite incapable of doing their duty; they are quarrelsome, and they interfere with people unnecessarily, and, as I say, when once they get a charge they go through with it somehow. I can assure you that what I am speaking of now I know as a fact, for I have seen it, and I have, I think, on more than one occasion had to complain to the Police Commissioner with regard to secret drinking. The most recent complaint I sent in he acted upon, and the men were punished.

52563. I should like to point out to you that in only one of the cases in which we have taken all the evidence that was available was a constable even accused of being drunk. That was Dubery's case, and he was promptly dismissed by the Commissioner. In all the other cases there was not even a suggestion of a constable being drunk?—It is very difficult to bring it home, and when one succeeds the punishment is usually quite inadequate to the offence. In Dubery's case the constable was "allowed to resign," which is, of course, a less serious punishment than a dismissal.

52564. That is rather an odd circumstance, is it not? If drinking is so common as you allege it is, it is rather odd that in not one of the numerous cases that we have taken evidence in has there been any suggestion of misconduct on the part of the police due to drunkenness. Is not that so?—We hesitated to bring it forward, but I think we could have brought forward quite a number of instances.

52565. (Mr. Whitmore.) Why did you hesitate to bring them forward?—I do not hesitate at anything. I thought I said it was difficult.

52566. No. You said you hesitated to bring it forward.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You said you could have brought it forward, but you hesitated to bring it forward?—Perhaps I did not say what I intended to say. What I meant to say was that if we could get witnesses to speak out, and make such statements as I am making now to you. That it was not for want of evidence, but simply because the witnesses would not speak out.

52567. (Chairman.) I have been immensely struck by the way in which the witnesses in this Commission have spoken out?—On that particular subject it is very difficult to get evidence, because the policemen are generally alone, and you will hardly ever get them so that you can produce two witnesses who saw them drinking at the same time; they take such care that they are not seen., except, of course, by those who supply them, and we have always thought it would be unwise to call publicans or their employees to give evidence in any case against the police. But I could give you times and places and everything if you want it, if you doubt my word as to secret drinking; and I could tell you, in fact, where you could go and see it at any time you wish, quite a number of cases; you only need to go there to see it, and I can tell you exactly where to go.

52568. The third point that you make is this improper drinking while the police are on duty?—Yes.

52569. That is the third head of complaint. What is the next?—I have not thought it out in that order exactly. I think the most serious thing that I can mention, as a matter of fact, is the drinking on the sly. Everything else follows from that—improper duties, false charges, and interfering unnecessarily with innocent persons.

52571. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You have had every opportunity of bringing forward such cases?—A number of witnesses who were willing to give evidence which I think would satisfy you on the point could not be called because their case came outside the terms of reference. I mean now cases which I myself have seen. For instance, I saw a policeman who was thoroughly drunk—in fact, he was so drunk that he could not walk straight—follow three soldiers from New Cross Gate to the Metropolitan Railway in New Cross Road. These three soldiers held together arm-in-arm, the policeman staggering behind cursing them. They said, "If we walk along quietly, do not answer, and take no notice of him, he cannot interfere," and so they walked along, as I say, till they got to the station. Then this policeman, apparently without any provocation at all, threw himself right on the back of the middle man, shook him, and tried to get him to resist him. I saw that myself, and my two children were with me at the time. Still the soldier's comrades stuck by him, and they managed to get him away. Just at that critical moment there was another policeman in view, and I myself stepped forward, and I said to the soldiers, "If you do not run now you will get locked up," and the three of them took to their heels and ran off as hard as they could.

52572. (Chairman.) Have you any remarks to make as to the method in which policemen effect arrests of prisoners? Have you formed any opinion as to whether they generally comply with the instructions in the White Book as to the method of effecting arrests?—One of the first things that policemen do when they think they have a drunken man or woman is to twist the arm, and that I consider to be a most brutal thing. I can give you another case, if I may, in which I saw the whole thing from beginning to end. I mean it is not hearsay. evidence at all. This was a case of a woman with a baby in her arms who fell down in some sort of a fit, and when I arrived on the scene there was a policeman on his knees attending to the woman, and a navvy standing assisting him holding the woman, and another navvy, a friend of the first, nursing the baby. That is just what I saw when I arrived, and they were doing everything they possibly could to bring this woman round. We stayed there, I should think, for twenty minutes or half an hour watching them. They got water, and rubbed the palms of her hands, bathed her forehead, and did everything they could for her, and in time she revived. Just as she was coming to a sergeant arrived on the scene, followed by another policeman. They were just about lifting the woman up as the sergeant came. The first thing that he did was to take hold of the woman's arm here by the wrist, and twist it back, which made her jump so that she screamed. She said, "You beast." He said, "That is the sort of thing to bring you round; it is ever so much better than medicine." So he went on ill-treating her down the hill. This occurred, too, in the New Cross Road, just by the Metropolitan Station. We followed down until they got in the hollow, and then he threw the woman violently against a shut-up shop. Then she said, "You can do anything you like with me; I do not care what happens." I stood by with some friends, and eventually I said to the sergeant, "What are you going to do with this woman?" He said, "What is that to do with you?" or words to that effect. "Well," I said, "I want to know what you are going to do with her, as she is not drunk." He said, "Who are you?" I said "I will take your number and I will give you my name." After I had given my name he calmed down a little bit, and asked me what I thought he ought to do with the woman. I said, "I think something should be done other than locking her up. I do not know what else you can do, but she should either be taken to the infirmary or somewhere where she would be taken care of, and where she could have a lodging for the night. Something should be done for her; it is not a case for imprisonment." After considerable argument, he eventually agreed to go with the woman and the child to East Greenwich Workhouse, where she was put up for the night, I and one of my children went with them to see that it was all right, and to see that she was really taken care of.

52573. Supposing the woman had been taken to the police station, exactly the same result would have happened, I think?—No.

52574. Are you so sure of that?—I am confident.

52575. As a matter of fact, a woman was brought in to one of the police stations while I was there with another of the Commissioners, and she was taken to the infirmary on an ambulance?—I do not wish to say it never happens. I only speak of what would happen in the majority of cases.

52576. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Did you make any complaint to the Commissioner of the ill-treatment by the police which you witnessed with some friends?—No, I did not make any complaint to the Commissioner.

52577. Why not?—Everything had been done, so far as I could see, that was necessary to be done, and I left it. If I were to complain of every little thing that I see like that there would be nothing else but complaints, and I should be put down as a man who was never satisfied with anything.

52578. (Mr. Whitmore.) Do you mean you often see that kind of occurrence?—You can see it whenever you want to in certain quarters at night time.

Mr. J. Tinewell.

31 July 1907.

52579. (Chairman.) You say that policemen in effecting arrests twist the arms of persons?—Yes, they twist the arm and ill-treat them. If you would take it I could bring before you a case now very similar to that where three persons were locked up, and there were no less than eight witnesses, all respectable people, there who would tell you the whole story from beginning to end, and would bear out exactly what I have told you with regard to the police that I saw.

52580. Appearances are very deceptive, are they not? You see an arrest effected, and you see this kind of torture, but I suppose there is hardly anybody in Court who has not at one time or another seen a prisoner arrested in the London streets. It is not for me to give evidence, but are you sure you are not misled?—Yes, I am. I am not exaggerating anything, and I want to be very careful not to exaggerate anything.

52581. How would you arrest a person?—I do not think you want to begin by twisting the arm. If you are going to arrest a man or a woman I should think you would take a firm grip of them, and take them off. I do not see why you want to twist the arm round like that nearly out of the socket. You want to handle them firmly of course.

52582. In the cases we have heard evidence about I think there was only one case in which there had been a complaint of rough treatment in the actual process of arrest. We have had at least the cases of 20 men who have been arrested, and who have complained that the arrest was wrong, but I do not think in any one of those cases the man has complained that his arm was twisted. Mr. Whitmore reminds me that in the Harding case and the Andrews case there were complaints of violence, but that was afterwards.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Not in the arrest?

52583. (Chairman.) No?—I have brought particulars of five cases just as sample cases that I know something about.

52584. (Mr. Whitmore.) Cases that we have heard?—No, none of them I think.

52585. (Chairman.) We have closed this particular kind of evidence, and we cannot hear those cases now or we shall go on for ever?—Just so, but you say you have not heard of violence being used to prisoners while under arrest, and therefore I have brought particulars in a few cases in order that I might satisfy you upon that.

52586. You see arrests continually, and this twisting of the arm is quite common, according to you?—Yes.

52587. I am pointing out to you that we have heard at least 20 cases in which persons have complained that they have been wrongfully arrested, and in not even one of those cases has complaint been made that the police arrested roughly. I am only putting to you that there are cases which you know something about because you helped to draw up the evidence?—Yes. You have not a list of the cases that I sent in to you, have you?

52588. Yes?—I am very sorry to say I did not bring mine with me.

52589. We have a list of the cases, and if you will name the case we will look at the document again?—I could not from memory, but I am quite sure that there is more than one.

52590. Very well. If you will send in a list of the cases in which you say some evidence has been given before the Commission of that kind of improper arrest we will take a note of it. You can do that if you like. We have all the documents you have sent in to us. You sent us a list of cases in which you say there was an improper and cruel arrest?—Mrs. Braham, for instance, complained of rough treatment.

52591. I think I said there was one case in which a woman complained, but that was not of a twisted arm.

52592. (Mr. Eldon Bankes.) No, it was a different class of complaint?—In the case of Mr. and Mrs. Stow, which I sent in, both were badly treated, and also in the case of Mr. and Mrs. White. You received the papers in those cases.

52593. (Chairman.) Our recollection is that in only one case was there a complaint of twisting the arm?—You did not call those witnesses before you.

52594. Twisting the arm in the way you suggest is rather torturing the prisoner?—Yes.

52595. That is what you are suggesting?—Yes, at the Police Court Andrews and his witnesses complained of the twisting of his arms when arrested, but his subsequent injuries were far more serious, and that became a matter of secondary importance.

52596. Will you tell us whether that has been suggested in any case in which you have sent in the papers?—These cases that I have given to you now.

52597. We will have a look at those later. Have you anything more to say as to arrest?—No.

52598. Now let us come to the charge room. What have you to say as to the way in which the Inspectors and officers making charges do their duty?—I do not think sufficient care is taken with regard to the taking down of statements or complaints. I have frequently heard accused persons say, "I said so-and-so and so-and-so," when the charge was being taken "I denied the charge," and all that sort of thing, and you may say that in nearly all cases the police present will say he did not deny the charge.

52599. Whereas, in fact, he did?—He says he did. Again and again that is said.

52600. That is a charge against the Inspector in the charge room, whose duty it is now, according to the existing regulations, to take a note of what the prisoner says?—It is not always an Inspector. Very often it is what they call a station sergeant.

52601. Yes; I mean an officer in charge of the station?—Yes.

52602. Have you been into a police station and heard charges made often?—I have never been in except in the first case, and that was a case in which a man was frog-marched, and the moment I got into the station I was ordered into a side room. That was the only time.

52603. Into the waiting room?—Into a little room, and I was told I was not in the public streets now, "You go in there."

52604. What were you going into the waiting room for—as a witness?—As a witness. Me and my two children saw a man frog-marched and kicked, and his arms and legs twisted while he was face downwards, and we went, thinking to tell the Inspector or the station sergeant who would take the charge what had happened, but we were not allowed to go forward to the officer for about an hour.

52605. I understand you to say that when you arrived at the station you were shown into the waiting room?—Not shown in. We were ordered in.

52606. Which police station was that at?—This was at Newington.

52607. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) In what year?—1897.

52608. (Chairman.) That is a very long time ago. We obviously cannot go into the details of that case. Without reference to the actual details of the charge in that case I want to know how you were treated on that occasion. You say you were ordered into the waiting room?—Yes.

52609. Ultimately, did you see the station officer?—Yes, I saw the Inspector.

52610. Did he listen to your story?—You can hardly call it listening to it. He asked me who and what I was, and what I was going to do, and whether I was going to appear against the policemen, and things like that. It was what they call a very busy night, and he excused himself afterwards on that ground—that he could not give me much attention.

52611-12. What was your grievance?—I do not think it was very nice to be kept in the middle of the night for three-quarters of an hour among a lot of rough people like that and ordered to sit down among them, and mind my own business, and that sort of thing. I was doing what I thought it was the proper duty of a citizen to do.

52613. I am assuming that there is not the least suggestion that you were not, but I cannot see what else could have been done. You were asked to sit in the waiting room, and you say you were ordered to sit in the waiting room. The difference between a request and an order is not very great under those circumstances?—No, but I think one should have been allowed to go forward and see the Inspector.

52614. You mean while this particular man was being charged?—Yes.

52615. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Is this still in 1897?—Yes.

52616. (Chairman.) We cannot go into it. Did you make any complaint at the time to the Chief Commissioner?—We fought the case out in the Courts. It was three months before the Courts.

52617. I do not care what happened in that particular case, because it is a great deal too far back for us to inquire into, but I am concerned now with your own treatment. Did you make any complaint at the time to the Chief Commissioner?—I do not think I did. Probably it did not occur to me that that was the thing to do. The Inspector said, "If you want to give evidence you must be here on Monday morning to go before the Magistrate." In doing that I thought I was doing everything that was necessary.

52618. I do not quite see what your grievance is about this charge room?—I mean to say I think anyone coming forward to give evidence in a case of that sort should be welcomed and encouraged to give such evidence.

52619. Is there anything else you would like to say about the charge room?—That is the only time I have ever been inside. I tried to get in at Tottenham Court Road once to make a similar complaint, but I was ordered out, and another man who went with me was threatened with violence by the Inspector.

52620. How long ago was that?—That would be, I think, about 1901, or it may have been 1902.

52621. Have you anything to say about bail or as to obstacles being placed in the way of getting bail?—Yes. I think that is another matter that ought to be attended to. I think, for instance, as soon as bail is tendered, if the prisoner is one who ought to be bailed, it should be accepted. Again, I can give you a case if you would like me to do it.

52622. I cannot quite follow that yet. Do you mean that in every case a prisoner ought to be allowed to go out on his own recognisances?—No. If, for instance, an Inspector decides that £5 or £10 shall be the bail for a prisoner, and supposing the landlord of that prisoner came forward and offered to stand bail for £5 or £10, if he came at two o'clock in the day he should not be ordered to come again at seven or eight o'clock to-night, the prisoner being in the cell all the time. That is what I say.

52623. Does that delay in the acceptance of bail often take place in your experience?—I cannot give many instances of that, but it is spoken of in a general way. A person charged with being drunk would be kept long enough in the cell to get sober, and then you could not possibly prove that they were not drunk when arrested.

52624. Is it not the best course to take, if a prisoner appears to be drunk, to keep him in the cell?—No.

52625. You cannot let him go, can you?—Take, for instance, a person who is perfectly sober; if he or she is perfectly sober some means ought to be provided by which they could be proved to be sober and allowed to go then. Take, for instance, the case of a woman who has not tasted a drop of anything to drink for a week. She is arrested and taken to the police station and charged with being drunk and disorderly; her landlord comes forward at two o'clock and says, "I will stand bail for this woman." He is told, "I cannot take bail now, will you come again at six or seven o'clock, or, at seven or eight o'clock to-night and I will fix the amount. I do not think that ought to be necessary.

52626. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Are these things that have been told to you?—I know of them.

52627. From their being told to you?—As a matter of fact, the person I have in my mind's eye at the present time is a person I know.

52628. You said a moment ago, in answer to the learned Chairman that these things are spoken of in a general way. You mean they are spoken of to you in a general way by persons who say that is what happened?—Yes. I gave you that case because I know something of it, and I know the person.

52629. (Chairman.) Was the charge there a charge of being drunk and disorderly?—Yes.

52630. If the police honestly believed that the woman in question was drunk and disorderly, I suppose there was no impropriety in her remaining in the cell until she got sober?—If the prisoner declares she is sober, and a gentleman comes forward and offers to stand bail for her, and says she is a sober woman, then I think a doctor should be called in, and if she was found to be sober there and then on the spot she should be allowed out on bail and not detained for seven or eight hours.

52631. The evidence before us is that if the accused denies that he or she is drunk a doctor is sent for as a matter of course?—I do not think that is so. but it ought to be so.

52632. However, as to that, I understand the evidence before us is that that is the rule that is acted upon?—It may be the rule, but I think it is rarely acted upon.

52633. Let me come back to your case of a woman who is arrested about 2 o'clock, and the police say she is drunk. Assuming, for a moment, that the police are right, and that she is not sober, and that her friends come to fetch her away, ought she to be allowed to depart till she can go without public scandal?—I should say that would be all right, but at the same time I think you ought to have more than the policeman's opinion; you ought to have the doctor's opinion.

52634. Then the case would really turn on the point as to the doctor, and not on the point of delay in the acceptance of bail?—Delay lies behind neglect to call the doctor in.

52635. Do I understand you to say that in this particular case when the landlord came shortly after the time of arrest he was told to go away and to come back at 6 o'clock?—Yes, or after 6.

52636. Why was he told that. What is your suggestion?—My suggestion is that that would allow time for her to get sober according to the policeman's idea, and the next day it would be most difficult, unless the woman had a first-rate character, as happened in this particular case, for her to prove that she was not drunk at 2 o'clock because she was kept till 7 o'clock before she was released and allowed to go and see a doctor.

52637. Do you mean that if she had been bailed out at 2 o'clock the landlord who came would have seen her and would have seen that she was sober?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) And that the police kept her there on purpose so that that should not happen?

52638. (Chairman.) That is your suggestion?—Yes.

52639. It is not a case of improper delay in bailing a person in the case of a charge fit to be taken?—To begin with, there is neglect to call a doctor in.

52640. What I mean is this. Do you allege, as a general thing, that sureties are kept waiting at the police station. It does not matter what case it is. When they arrive at the police station is it suggested that sureties are kept waiting?—I cannot say whether that is a general thing or not, but I think the police have got an idea that if a person is allowed out too soon they will be able first of all to go and see a doctor and begin to see witnesses in order to prepare their defence for the next morning—that is my idea—so that the greater and the more obstacles they can put in the way of persons under arrest getting up their cases to defend themselves the better chance they stand of getting a conviction.

52641. If, in the case you are suggesting, the landlord had been allowed to see the lady you are of opinion they would have seen that she was sober, and that she would have won the case?—The charge against her was dismissed because of her character. I am only speaking now of a person who had been previously convicted. No matter how sober she might have been, if there had been a previous conviction against her, she would probably have been fined for being drunk again.

52642. You think in all cases where drunkenness is alleged the doctor should be sent for if the accused denies the charge?—Yes.

52643. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I rather think you suggest that the case ought to be tried before the previous conviction is given in evidence. As I understand, however, if there is any proof of previous drunkenness, that is taken into consideration against the accused?—Yes. Then there is another thing. I think Magistrates ought not to allow prevous convictions to be read out in Court, because the officer, as you know, is not sufficiently careful to make sure that all the convictions against the John Smith in his mind really refer to the John Smith before the Court; and if an officer brings forward six or seven convictions, and reads them out before the Magistrate comes to a decision, he is bound to go under. Then there is another thing. I think all previous convictions should be given on oath, and not simply read out by a policeman at the back of the Court. He should be sworn and put into the witness box.

52644. (Chairman.) What happens in ordinary drunk and disorderly cases in the Police Courts? Are the previous convictions read out?—I can give you some instances. I can give you an instance where a previous conviction was read out against a man before he was asked whether he had any defence.

52645. At which Court was that?—That was at Westminster, and Mr. Horace Smith was the Magistrate. They actually heard the evidence against the man, and before he was asked whether he had any defence, or if he had got any witnesses, an officer stepped forward with a paper and read out convictions against him. Then Mr. Smith said, "Have you any witnesses in this case?" He said, "Yes, sir, five or six." Of course, he went under.

52646. Were you present?—Yes.

52647. You suggest that there was a case in which a prisoner was charged with having been drunk and disorderly, and that before the case for the prosecution had ended a constable was allowed to give evidence of previous convictions for drunkenness. That is your point?—Yes.

52648. And you say the Magistrate allowed it?—Yes, I heard it.

52649. Did the defendant in that case call witnesses?—Yes, six or seven.

52650. What happened?—He was convicted.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) I may say there are some offences under the Licensing Act of 1872 in which previous convictions have to be brought forward.

(Chairman.) Yes. But that is not the case when a summons is taken out under Section 12 of the Licensing Act, 1872.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Where there are previous convictions under the Licensing Act, 1872, the previous convictions are referred to.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) We know that certain power is given to the Magistrate.

(Chairman.) I quite agree, but I doubt whether, when a summons is taken out under Section 12 of the Licensing Act, 1872, the previous convictions are referred to.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) It depends on what the prisoner is charged with.

52651. (Chairman.) Yes. That is rather a complaint against the Police Magistrate, is it not, than against the police?—I do not know whether it is a complaint or not, but they have so many cases to deal with that they cannot do all that you think ought to be done.

52652. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You did not see the summons, and you do not know what the precise offence was before the Magistrate?—He was arrested and not summoned at all.

52653. (Chairman.) Have you anything to say about medical attendance on prisoners? Have you had any experience which will justify you in giving an opinion with regard to the matter connected with medical attendance on prisoners?—I have heard gentlemen sometimes complain that they have asked for a doctor, and that no doctor had been brought to them. For instance, in the case of Mr. White and his son, he pressed to be allowed to see a doctor because he himself was a teetotaler. He was charged with being drunk and disorderly.

52654. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean that that complaint has been made to you?—Yes.

52655. (Chairman.) Is there any other general complaint as to the conduct of the police which occurs to you or upon which you would like to express an opinion?—No. I do not know that I have any other complaint. I have sent you in twelve suggestions.

52656. I am coming to those directly when I have finished your general evidence. Will you read out your suggestions? You must remember that our terms of reference are limited, but still we will hear your recommendations?—The first suggestion that I should like to make is that the Metropolitan Police Force should be placed under the control of the direct representatives of the electors in the Metropolis, who would be more amenable to the wishes of the people than the Home Secretary.

The second suggestion is that the highest appointments should be open to men of the rank and file, so that, as in the legal, medical, and other professions, the Chief of the Police should be fully equipped for his responsible duties by experience gained in the various grades through which he has passed.

The third suggestion is that in order to ensure that men of integrity should attain to the most responsible positions, the rank and file should be permitted, in certain cases, at any rate, to communicate directly to the Watch Committee, and, supposing they were under a Watch Committee, assured that, whatever their rank, their communications should receive proper attention. If this were done, for instance, by policemen who found themselves unduly pressed by their officers to make arrests, or who were being trained and encouraged to disregard the sancity of an oath to get convictions, it would probably have the threefold effect of assisting those in authority to select the most worthy men for promotion, and of redressing a police and prisoners' grievance at the same time.

The fourth suggestion is that the age at which men may join the force should be raised to 25 or 30 years. The public would then have the advantage of more matured men as recruits, and the further advantage of retaining their services up to the age of 50 or 55, while the saving in pensions would be very considerable, and the number of pensioners entering the labour market to compete unfairly with the ordinary workers would be materially reduced. I may say, with regard to that, that the total expenditure of the Pension Fund for the latest year for which we have returns amounted to no less than £450,485 19s. 10d.

52656.* (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What year is that?—For the year ending March 31st, 1906.

52657. (Mr. Whitmore.) Last year?—Yes.

The fifth suggestion is that recruiting should cease for a time, and the undesirables should be carefully weeded out until the force should be reduced to a size (say, 10,000 or 12,000) that would compare in relation to the population, etc., with provincial towns. It is undoubtedly a mistake to think of the force as having to control (that is how it is often referred to—that the force has to control so many millions of people) seven millions of people. The overwhelming majority of those people are not only law-abiding themselves, but they would be ready to assist in preserving the peace among others. With regard to this fifth suggestion I should like to point out to you the difference in the cost of the Metropolitan Police and the cost of the Provincial Police, and in order to do that I have added the population of 31 of our largest towns together, which make up a population of something over the population of the Metropolitan Police District. The population of the 31 largest towns in England and Wales was 6,605,310. The population of the Metropolitan Police District was 6,554,449. That is a population greater than the population of the Metropolitan Police District by 51,861. The inhabited houses in the 31 towns were 1,298,264, and in the Metropolitan Police District 924,143, being greater by 374,121. The strength of the Metropolitan Police Force was 15,565, and for the 31 large towns 10,144, so that the strength of the police of the 31 towns was smaller by 5,421. The salaries and pay of the Metropolitan Police Force were £1,589,966, and for the 31 towns £904,886, so that the amount of salaries and pay of the police of the 31 towns was smaller by £685,080. The gross total cost of the Metropolitan Police was for the same year £2,196,321, and for the 31 towns £1,164,279. That shows that the cost of the police of the 31 towns was smaller by £1,032,042. That is taken from the Police Report (County and Borough) for the year ending the 29th September, 1906. The figures are taken from this report simply for comparison, they probably having been all prepared in the same way and at the same time. The population and number of inhabited houses are taken from the last Census.

The sixth suggestion I would make is that it may be well to consider seriously whether the regulations as to the procuring of refreshments by the police while on duty should not be relaxed, and whether policemen who are found drunk on duty should not be more severely dealt with than at present. I think it impossible to really prohibit drinking. It would seem, therefore, to be the wiser course to remove the cause, or one of the causes, of secret drinking which appears to make many policemen servants of publicans and a very real danger to the public. I think if the foregoing suggestions were carried into effect the great bulk of wilful and careless mistakes would be prevented, and if the following suggestions were acted upon many other unavoidable mistakes would doubtless be discovered, and much needless suffering and humiliation would be avoided.

The seventh suggestion is that persons on being charged at a police station should be immediately handed over to the care of a neutral person not connected with the force who should be responsible, say, to the Magistrate, for the safe keeping of accused persons, and for the production of the charge sheet, together with a written and signed account of anything the prisoner or the police may say when the charge is taken. This latter would obviate any dispute as to what was actually said at a time when the prisoner is usually without witnesses. The person having charge of prisoners awaiting trial should be empowered to accept bail of one or more persons (I say one or more, because in very poor districts £10 bail from one person may make it impossible for him to get bail at all, whereas if they will take two or three persons for a smaller amount they would get it) in suitable cases at a uniform rate, according to the offence with which the prisoners are charged, and as far as possible to arrange for their attendance before the Magistrate at a time when their work would be the least interfered with. At the trial he or an assistant should make any inquiries the Magistrate may require. If a Magistrate wants to verify any statement, either a statement made by the police or by an accused person, I do not think a member of the Police Force is a proper person to send to make those inquiries. Therefore it seems to me that the fairest way would be for the Magistrate to have a certain number of, you might call them police court officials, if you like, to make such inquiries so that they would be perfectly sure that those inquiries were made fairly.

52658. (Chairman.) I understand you to suggest in your recommendations that some neutral person should be the person to accept or reject the charge?—No, I should allow the officer in charge of the station to accept the charge.

52659. My reason for asking you that question is this: It would involve, would it not, the appointment at every police station of a quite new official who is not a policeman and not a Magistrate?—That, I think, would not involve any additional expense nor any larger number of persons. You could place what you call the gaoler of the police station under the control of the Magistrate and not under the control of the Inspector or Superintendent of the police station.

52660. At present the gaoler is, in fact, an ordinary constable, as we know?—Yes.

52661. Then your suggestion is that the gaoler at the police station should not be a police constable, but a person appointed by a Police Magistrate, or, at all events, appointed by some other authority than the Chief Commissioner of Police?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I do not quite understand that, because if that person is to be the gaoler how can he be present when the charge is taken and take down what is said?

(Chairman.) I think I know what Mr. Timewell means. I think he means that the gaoler is nearly always present when the charge is taken; at least, that is the course of proceeding that I observed.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I thought the gaoler was looking after the prisoners.

52662. (Chairman.) This is what I myself saw. When a prisoner was brought in the Inspector went to his desk, and the gaoler came and stood near him; the charging constable brought in the prisoner, and the prisoner was put into the dock. The moment the charge was taken and the proceedings in the charge room were over the prisoner was taken off by the gaoler to the corridor where there are the doors opening into the various cells. Your suggestion is that the gaoler should in that sense be a neutral person, not appointed by the Police Commissioner but appointed by the Magistrate or somebody else?—Yes.

52663. And that he should be present during the taking or the refusing of the charge?—Yes. My principal reason for that is because I think they are not so careful as they might be in taking the prisoners to the cells. For instance, the policeman who makes the arrest in the street very often goes with the prisoner to the cell.

52664. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That must be, I suppose, when the gaoler is not there. Is it your experience (I only want to get at what the system is) that the gaoler is always present when a charge is made?—The gaoler is supposed to be there, I believe. My point is that they are not so careful as they ought to be. Sometimes they will allow another policeman to act as a gaoler.

52665. Yes, but it is news to me that the gaoler is supposed to be there when the charge is made.

(Chairman.) Mr. Timewell's recollection is exactly in accordance with my own.

52666. Have you finished that recommendation No. 7?—I was just going to say that I think there is a great deal of brutality carried on (I can only speak from hearsay) in the police cells. I have very often heard that people going there a second time sometimes take the precaution to enter the police cells backwards so as to have their face to the constable at the time they go in the door.

52667. That is what has been told you?—Yes, that is to say, they have been kicked into the cell.

The eighth suggestion is that police courts should be really open to the public so that anyone desiring to hear a case tried, or, say, wishing to give evidence on behalf of a stranger, should have an opportunity of doing so. I think if the people who wanted to give evidence could enter the police court anywhere, say in a public gallery or in a public place, and a case was brought before the Magistrate which they recognised (they may not know a man by name) or know something about it, because they had perhaps seen the arrest the previous night—they would be able to say, "I will go and give evidence on behalf of that man." At the present time it appears to me there is no possibility of getting into a police court if the police do not wish it.

52668. They are public courts?—Yes, but only by name.

52669. (Mr. R. D. Muir.) They are public courts by Statute?—I am speaking of what is the practice.

52670. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What you mean by that is, I suppose, that there is a policeman at the door?—Yes. There is a policeman on the door, and practically every one who wants to enter the court has to state his business, and when a man says, "I want to go in as a witness," he is told, "If you are wanted you will be called; you stand there" and he cannot do anything.

52671. (Chairman.) I think there is a policeman at the door. Have you ever tried to get in yourself?—I have generally gone in through another doorway.

52672. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You have had no difficulty?—No.

52673. (Mr. Whitmore.) What is the other doorway?—I generally go in through the Solicitors' door.

52674. (Chairman.) I was once a witness, although I was a counsel, and I do not think I was asked my business at the door. The last time I went to a police court I went as a witness?—But perhaps you had a frock coat and a tall hat on, and that makes all the difference.

52675. (Mr. Whitmore.) Is it because the court is so full of witnesses that it is difficult to get in?—No, I have known cases where there has been room for people to sit down, but they were not allowed in.

52676. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You would agree it is necessary that there should be some supervision exercised by the police as to who enters the police court?—Yes.

52677. (Chairman.) But, as I understand it, all those arrangements are made by the Magistrate. It is a Petty Sessional Court held under Statute?—The Magistrate probably does not know anything about what is going on outside. They generally enter the court, I understand, from a side door. I do not suppose any one of our London Magistrates has ever entered his court through the public entrance.

Mr. J. Timewell.

31 July 1907.

52678. The Magistrate must be responsible for the precincts of the court?—I thought there would be no harm in bringing this suggestion forward.

52679. Certainly not.

52680. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Have you ever made any complaint to any Magistrate of a difficulty in getting admission to a police court to give evidence?—No.

52681. Or to the police?—I have not made complaints.

52682. Or to the Inspector of Police?—No; I have heard people threatened by the police that they would get thrown out if they were too pressing with their appeals to be allowed to go in: "Why can't I go in? That man has gone in. Why can't I go in?" "You will be thrown out if you are not quiet."

52683. (Chairman.) What is the next recommendation?—The ninth recommendation is that all evidence should be given on oath or affirmation, including evidence of previous convictions, which should be given at the proper time so as not to embarrass prisoners with a bad record who might be innocent of the charge on which they are at that time before the court.

52684. That is the law now?—Yes, only it is not carried out.

52685. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) As I understand, what you mean by that is that the evidence of previous convictions is read from a list, and not given on oath or affirmation?—Yes, and they are not careful to make sure that the convictions really refer to the prisoner before the Court.

52686. (Chairman.) What is your next recommendation?—The tenth recommendation is that it should be made less difficult to obtain process against policemen who wilfully commit perjury. No one would desire that they should be recklessly proceeded against, but there ought to be some limit to a Magistrate's discretion which should preclude him from saying, in effect, "If you lay before me the sworn information of six reliable witnesses I shall refuse to allow the police to be tried."

52687. Has any Magistrate ever said that?—That has been done. We have put that to the test.

52688. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Have you ever heard in your own experience any Magistrate make that observation?—That is what his action amounted to.

52689. I wish you would tell me. Have you ever heard a Magistrate say so?—No, I have never heard him say it.

52690. (Chairman.) So I understood?—More Magistrates are needed, and the hours of sitting should be extended in order to give greater attention to applications and the work of the Court generally.

The eleventh recommendation is that in cases where official legal assistance is required for the police it would be well for a representative of the Chief Commissioner to personally interview the officers concerned before engaging a solicitor. I mean it should not be left to the local police to decide whether a certain constable should be defended or not.

52691. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You do not mean this to refer only to a case where the police require assistance?—I mean in all cases where the police are going to get legal assistance, whether for defence or for the prosecution.

52692. (Chairman.) You say it should be dealt with at headquarters, and not locally?—Yes.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) If the application were made, would not the Magistrate certify for legal assistance?

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) If the case is taken up by the Director of Public Prosecutions, that is so, but in other cases the local superintendent recommends it.

(The Witness.) My point is that no one at headquarters goes to interview the persons concerned, but they take it for granted that the application will be all right.

52693. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean by that whenever it is applied for it is granted?—I do not mean to say it is always granted.

52694. There must be some discrimination used by the persons through whom the application goes?—I believe it would be more often refused if they knew the facts. For instance, if the Police Commissioner, or his representative, knew the facts, prosecutions would not be entered upon as they are now.

52695. I do not quite follow the grievance with regard to this which you are seeking to remedy?—I am not a member of the Police Force, and I do not know the inside workings of it, but my impression is that if a local superintendent were to apply to the Chief Commissioner for legal assistance, and, as far as he could judge from the papers sent in, it was a good case, the legal assistance would be provided on the application of the Superintendent, whereas, I think the representative of the Police Commissioner should really go into the locality and see what the case is for himself, because my idea is that when a policeman gets legal assistance the prisoner stands a very poor chance of getting off, even when the police have made a bad "mistake."

52696. I suppose you are presuming that the accused is not defended by a solicitor or counsel?—Yes.

52697. You mean if legal assistance is given to the police, and no legal assistance is given to the accused, the accused is at a disadvantage?—At a very great disadvantage.

52698. (Chairman.) Are not the police at a disadvantage very often where the accused employs counsel or a solicitor, and the police are not represented by counsel or a solicitor on their side?—That may be so to some extent, but I think, speaking generally, the police with their officers are equal to an ordinary solicitor or counsel without legal assistance, and if you go and give them legal assistance without at all considering whether it is a case deserving of legal assistance, I think you are spending public money wastefully.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) What it comes to is that you are supplying somebody who does not do the work any better than the police.

(Chairman.) What the recommendation amounts to is that there might be some waste of public money.

52699. (Mr. Whitmore.) In what respect would your recommendation make any change in the practice?—I mean to say a very much larger number of cases are taken up now than would be taken up if, say, the Chief Commissioner would make himself acquainted with the facts, because he would come to the conclusion that the case was not one which he ought to support.

52700. (Sir Edward Henry.) The cases have to go before the Magistrate the next morning, and therefore there would not be very much time to consider the matter.

52701. (Chairman.) We see your point. Now recommendation twelve?—That is with regard to medical men. It may well be worth considering whether it would not be in the interest of all parties concerned to have a number of medical men on the books at each police station who would be willing to visit accused persons at stated fees instead of limiting the work to the divisional police as at present.

52702. I understand that these recommendations are not recommendations from yourself alone, but are recommendations which come from your Society, and which you are in agreement with. Is that so?—That is so, excepting recommendations six and seven. Those two recommendations the Committee are rather divided upon, leaving me at liberty to bring them forward in my own name.

52703. What is the number of the Committee of your Society?—Six.

52704. Lord Russell is President, I understand?—Yes.

52705. Is there any Vice-President?—No.

52706. Will you let me have the names of the Committee?—Yes. There was one other suggestion which I have passed over, and I do not know whether I might go back to that. It is not exactly a suggestion, but I thought, if it were not too late, it might be well worth while to hear what prison doctors and governors of prisons had to say with regard to the condition in which prisoners are received. I do not know whether you have been through the prison reports or not, but in recent years they have frequently called attention to the condition in which prisoners are received, and a very large number of them have to spend practically the whole of their time in hospital. I will not weary you with a long story with regard to that, but I should like to hand you in the papers.

52707. You see that class of prisoner we have nothing to do with. Those are prisoners who are sent to goal after conviction for indictable offences?—No, I am speaking of local prisons where prisoners are undergoing short terms of imprisonment.

52708. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Do you mean in the Metropolitan area?—Yes.

52709. (Chairman.) Is your suggestion that that throws some light on the way the prisoners are treated by the police?—Yes.

52710. Very well, we will take a note of that?—I think that is all.

52711. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) One thing I want to ask you something about. You made a very serious statement if it is correct. If I followed you correctly, you said that 50 per cent. of the constables on night duty are incapable of performing their duties at night time in consequence of secret drinking?—Yes.

52712. That is the statement you make?—That is my opinion and my opinion is based on what I have seen.

52713. What do you mean by "secret drinking"?—I mean by "secret drinking" that a very large number of publicans regularly supply policemen on duty with drink; it is the regular thing.

52714. Have you ever made any complaint of this to the Chief Commissioner?

(Witness.) I think perhaps you, Sir Edward, remember that I have complained to you.

(Sir Edward Henry.) I think I received a complaint from you once with regard to what was going on at a public-house in the N Division.

(Witness.) It is so common that I do not take much notice of it in the ordinary way, but I simply wanted to tell you how it was carried on.

52715. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Have you observed that 50 per cent. of the police on duty at night are incapable of performing their duty at night from drink?—I cannot say I have seen 50 per cent. I have seen them drinking at night, and I should think 50 per cent. of the men on night duty are more or less, I will not say drunk, but under the influence of drink. I think that is what I said.

52716. I think you used the words "incapable of performing their duty"?—No. I did not mean that 50 per cent. were incapable.

52717. You said so just now, and I want to get at what you mean. You say they are more or less under the influence of drink?—Yes.

52718. And it is in consequence of that that you say these offences are committed?—Yes. In the work we are doing we constantly hear people say, "The policeman was drunk or he would not have made the arrest."

52719. Is it upon that you base your allegation?—Partly, and from what I have seen as well. I have seen quite a number of cases where there has been no mistake about a policeman being drunk—not the slightest question of it.

52720. Is it part of your duty to make any observations?—No.

52721. The cases that have come before you have been merely casual, as they might be to any other person?—Yes.

52722. I mean you do not go about looking for it?—I do not. I have repeatedly seen men drinking whom I could report and get into serious trouble. Perhaps you will think I have not done my duty, but the thing is so common that I have not thought it worth while to bother about it.

52724. How long have you been of this opinion?—For some years. For ten or fifteen years I have known that sort of thing going on.

52725. You never made a complaint to the Commissioner. You made a complaint once of what was going on at a public-house in the N Division. It would seem to be of very great importance that the Commissioner should be told of it?—As I said before, perhaps you think I have not done what I ought to have done, but I have seen it day and night, and it is so common that I have not thought it worth while to report it, and so personally bear all the trouble that would involve.

52726. You say it has been going on for ten or fifteen years, and it is, according to what you have told us, the chief cause of all the difficulties and the grievances which you have spoken of against the police. Do I understand that during the ten or fifteen years you have never formulated a complaint or made a statement to the present Commissioner or to the preceding Commissioner?—I should not like to say that. I think I have complained more than once, but I am not positive of that.

52727. That was a complaint as regards a specific house?—Yes, I think Sir Edward has heard of my opinion, although not in writing—that is to say, a gentleman very often called on me who is a personal friend of Sir Edward's, the matter has been talked of, and I am quite satisfied that Sir Edward knows what my opinion is with regard to that question.

52728. I notice that the recommendation you are making to us upon this basis—that is, dealing with secret drinking, because that is the cause of most of the charges—is made on your own behalf, and really your Committee do not agree?—They are divided. Two members of my Committee, I think I may say, are men who would close every public-house in London if they could; they would simply shut them up without consideration for anybody at all, but I do not go that far. I am a teetotaler myself, but if a man were to ask me for a glass of beer I would give him one.

52729. Does that include a policeman?—I do not think I should give a policeman on duty a drink. I think that everybody—all sensible men, at any rate—ought to be allowed to use their own discretion; and, if they want a glass of beer, they should have it. And I say, with regard to policemen, if they were to be allowed to go and purchase what was necessary for them, there would be no excuse for them to get drink given them. That is a very serious trouble, not only for publicans, but for tradesmen, I can assure you.

52730. Do you keep a list of complaints?—No.

52731. Does your society keep any books?—As to occurrences, do you mean?

52732. Yes?—No, we have not done that. We keep a record of the cases that we take up. We have a record in that way.

52733. What I was anxious to see was if you had such a record or any book which would show what number of complaints had been made to you within a given time?—We do not take notice of that at all—not of drinking.

52734. I am not referring to drinking now. I am speaking generally of complaints against the police?—We have particulars of all the cases that have been brought to us from the time we formed the society up to the present time.

52735. That was in 1902, was it?—I think so.

52736. Then you mean you would have a number of complaints made to you since 1902?—Of cases that have come to us such as we could deal with. We do not take notice of everything that comes to us—I mean to say a person's character may not warrant it.

52737. A number of complaints would be made to you, I suppose, which, upon investigation, you do not believe?—Certainly.

52738. Would you only enter those that you do accept as having some foundation?—After having made a very careful examination and inquiry.

52739. Can you give me, for example, the number of complaints in 1905?—Not now. Do you mean from here from the papers before me?

52740. Either from there or from anything you have. Have you a book which would show it?—We do not keep a record of the cases in a book. We keep the cases together. We have all the papers collected together concerning each particular case tied up.

52741. Do you mean you keep them tied up for each particular year?—No. At present I have them all together.

Mr. J. Timewell.
31 July 1907.

52742. Do you know what number of cases you have got tied up like that since 1902?—I should think about thirty or forty.

52743. (Chairman.) Do you mean there have been from thirty to forty cases that you have considered serious enough to take up?—Yes. That is from memory.

52744. It is a large margin I am giving you—thirty to forty; more than forty?—I should not think so.

52745. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) We have a great many more than that before us supplied by the police?—You have.

52746. Only a certain number would come before you, naturally?—Yes.

52747. Do you take up cases yourself by applying to persons?—No, at any rate, not latterly.

52749. You do that, and I suppose if you think it a case worth proceeding with you offer to take it up?—Yes.

52750. Is it in that way that you get most of the thirty or forty cases, or have they come unsolicited?—I should think the majority have come unsolicited.

52751. You issue pamphlets?—Yes.

(Chairman.) The Commissioners are much obliged to you for your evidence.

SIXTY-FOURTH DAY.

Thursday, 1st August 1907.

PRESENT:

Sir David Brynmor Jones, K.C., M.P. (Chairman).
Rufus Daniel Isaacs, Esq., K.C., M.P.
Charles Algernon Whitmore, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law).
J. W. St. Lawrance Leslie, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law), Secretary.
J. F. Waley, Esq. (Barrister-at-Law), (Assistant Secretary).

Sir Edward Richard Henry, recalled.

Sir E. R. Henry.
1 Aug. 1907.

52752. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Sir Edward, I just want to ask you about one or two matters with reference to bail. Is it your view that anything could be done to make it easier for the police as regards bail?—I think if the Magistrates were empowered to endorse on the back of a warrant that bail might be accepted in a specified sum it would be of great assistance to the police, and they would not then be obliged to keep the persons arrested in the police cells pending the decision of the Magistrate. That is the practice in India. In India, when you issue a warrant, you can endorse on the back of it that the accused, the person arrested, may be released on giving either personal recognisances or on giving two sureties, the police being left the discretion of determining whether the sureties tendered are suitable persons. I think that is a practice that ought to be legalised in this country, because under the present system, if a Magistrate issues a warrant and the police arrest a person, say, on Saturday, if the court is not sitting, they are obliged to keep the person in the cells until Monday morning. I am very strongly of opinion that such a practice ought to be legalised in this country, but of course it would require legislation to do it.

52753. Does the practice work well in India?—Very well.

52754. You have had experience of it?—I have had great experience of it, because I was a Magistrate for a great many years.

52755. In India is it compulsory that the Magistrate should state it, or is it discretionary?—It is discretionary. If he does not state it, of course the person is kept in police custody until the court sits.

52756. By this course a good deal of time would be saved, and the person would be liberated as soon as he had his bail?—At once.

52757. As far as you can see, is there any objection to the practice?—None whatever.

52758. As far as your evidence goes, I understand nothing but good could result from it?—Nothing but good could result from it.

52759. There is another thing I want to ask you about. A number of statements were made yesterday before us by Mr. Timewell, and one was as to secret drinking by the police. According to your experience, is there any sort of foundation for the general statement that was made as to secret drinking by the police?—I believe there is no foundation whatever for it. I go about myself, I see the men on their beats, and I have never come across a man who has been under the influence of drink. Of course, occasionally it is found by the officers that a man has had drink. Then he is brought up before us and very severely dealt with, but it is comparatively exceptional, or quite exceptional.

52761. (Chairman.) I should like to say upon that, and I feel perfectly certain that the other Commissioners will entirely agree with me, that we were very surprised to hear Mr. Timewell make a sweeping charge against the police, that 50 per cent. of the constables were under the influence of drink while on night duty, and that that was the cause of the mistakes that so often occurred. We think it right to say, as this is the last day on which evidence will be taken—we have been taking evidence now for a considerable time—that nothing has more struck us in the course of our proceedings than the testimony afforded to the sobriety of the police by the fact that, except in one among the many cases we have investigated, no complainant has even suggested that any constable concerned was "under the influence of drink." In that one case a young constable who had only been in the force a very short time had undoubtedly misbehaved himself, and had been immediately dismissed, long before this Commission was appointed. In view of the gravity of the statement made by Mr. Timewell, and the publicity given to it in the Press, we think it right in the public interest at once to make this statement.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I agree entirely with the observations which have been made by the learned Chairman, and I will only add this—that I was perfectly amazed to hear the statement made by Mr. Timewell, which is unsupported by any other testimony.

(Mr. Whitmore.) I think it should be well understood that this is the view of every one of the Commissioners.

52762. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I want to ask you, Sir Edward, a little about the work of the Assistant Commissioners, because I am not sure that we have it fully before us. There are three Assistant Commissioners?—Yes.

52763. Of whom I understand one to be a lawyer?—Yes.

52764. Are the duties divided between the three?—Yes, they are.

52765. Has each one a separate department?—He deals with separate subjects. The letters and everything pass through a general registry, but he deals with separate subjects.

52766. I think, so far as the evidence before us goes, I am right in saying that in all the cases which have been referred to the Assistant Commissioner, they always go before Major Wodehouse?—Yes, because they affect uniform officers. The cases affecting the Criminal Investigation Department officers will go before Sir Melville Macnaghten, but you have not been dealing with that department. The cases affecting the Public Carriage officers would go before Sir Alexander Bruce, who is in charge of that particular department.

52767. How far would it be Major Wodehouse's duty to investigate by personal observation the conduct of the police at the various stations?—He visits the stations as often as he can. He has a motor-car for that purpose, and he frequently goes round. I also go round, and in the course of the year I visit every station, and, of course, some stations I visit much more frequently.

52768. Have you any idea how often Major Wodehouse would visit stations during the year?—Do you mean how many visits would he pay in the year?

52769. Yes, to each particular station?—I could not say how many visits he would pay to one particular station.

52770. Is there any fixed number of such visits that he has to make, or is it left entirely to him?—It is left entirely to him. When he has leisure from other work he will order his car and go round and pay a visit, or if any particular matter cropped up in connection with an inquiry made by him which required him to go to the station in order to look into it he would go.

52771. Would he make any record of the visit?—Not necessarily, and not in any station book probably. He might or might not initial the register. Personally, I do not do that. I go to a station perhaps to enquire into one particular point. I do not attempt to go through all the books when I go to a station.

52772. I did not mean that. I meant would he make any record anywhere of the visits paid to the stations and of the result of his observations?—No.

52773. Either it is of no use or it would take too long?—Yes. If he found out anything he would come to me, and certainly we would discuss it. Of course many things have been dealt with in that way.

52774. (Chairman.) We found, at any rate in one case, that Major Wodehouse had made an entry in the Occurrence Book of his visit?—He did not make that entry. The entry is always made by the officer on duty. Whenever an officer visits the station he enters it in the Occurrence Book, the Occurrence Book being a sort of chronological record of all that transpires.

52775. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) Really the object of my question was this. I wanted to ascertain, if I could, how many times Major Wodehouse would visit Vine Street in 12 months?—I should say very frequently.

52776. He could very easily visit that station?—Yes. Coming back from the theatre, or coming back from dinner, or coming to the office, he might go in. Some of the stations are a considerable distance, and one has to make arrangements for getting there.

52777. You referred us to a case yesterday in answer to a question that I put to you which I have been examining from the documents before us. It appears from them that the Assistant Commissioner, who held an inquiry into this matter, and seems to have gone fully into it, came to the conclusion that the policeman was wrong, that the statements that he made with reference to what had transpired were wrong, and that he was not justified in arresting the gentleman whom he charged with disorder. I am mentioning this to you because you may not have the details exactly in your mind. It seemed to rest mainly upon the statement made by the person charged that he went to Vine Street to offer himself as a witness, that there was no crowd outside the station, that there were only three men (this was on the Boat Race night, a little before the charge was made against Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette), and that he then went to the police-constable, who simply ordered him to "Move on." The gentleman said that he had a right to be there, and the policeman said, "Very well, then I will charge you." Then he was charged with disorder, and some evidence was given. The case was commented on by the Commissioner, who said, "The constable says that the man started shouting." The constable's view was a different one on the facts. I do not want to go into it in detail, because the Assistant Commissioner was satisfied that this gentleman was saying what was correct, and consequently he dealt with the constable. I find this note: "The police-constable to be placed on M. R." ?—Morning report.

52778. "For arbitrary conduct in arresting a gentleman outside Vine Street Police Station on the night of the 7th April last. The case had better be brought before me for report." That is signed "F. W.' That is Major Wodehouse?—Yes.

52779. That seems to be a somewhat serious offence, does it not?—Yes.

52780. What I am suggesting to you with regard to it is, it is not like a case of an error of judgment or of some mistake being made by the constable. Apparently the constable was not interfered with in the slightest degree. He was outside the police-station; a member of the public comes up, and there is no crowd?—I have not seen the papers lately, but I have a sort of recollection that there was one witness, who was in a motor car, who said that there was a crowd. You have read the papers.

52781. Certainly the constable said so?—You have read the papers, but I thought there was a witness, who was in a motor car, who said that there was a crowd. I do not remember. I have not seen the papers. They were sent direct to you.

52782. I have read the first of them. According to the person complaining there was no crowd, and he was evidently believed by the Assistant Commissioner. On the first page I think you will find what the Assistant Commissioner said. He seems to me to accept the view of the gentleman. Do you see what he says?—Yes. "I cannot accept your evidence that he formed a portion of the crowd. The weight of evidence is all against you on that point."

52783. I do not want to go into it in detail, but I call your attention to the judgment, if I may call it so, of the Assistant Commissioner which makes the matter plain. That is the conclusion he came to very definitely?—Yes.

52784. And for that reason it was the policeman was punished. It strikes one as an extraordinary state of things that on this state of facts the constable should have arrested the man and charged him with disorder without the slightest reason. This gentleman appears to have taken the matter up, and to have brought it before you, and, upon inquiry, the constable was dealt with?—Of course, the punishment that was given does not represent the consequences to him. He can never expect promotion now.

52785. That is one matter I was going to ask you about. I put it quite plainly. Of course, I am only speaking for myself in this matter, but it does strike me that when a matter of this kind is brought to your knowledge, and the constable has behaved in this way—putting the person in very serious jeopardy when he is charged on the evidence of the police as to what takes place outside the police station, and the conclusion of the Assistant Commissioner is that there was no justification for what the constable did—he ought to be dealt with in an exemplary manner?—He has been punished and, as I say, he never can get any promotion.

Sir E. R. Henry.

52786. That is one of the matters I want to understand. He never can get promotion?—No. In the same way, too, when we say "Resignation permitted," it means that the man loses all his rateable deductions; I mean to say, when he leaves the force, he not only leaves the force, but he loses all the rateable deductions which he otherwise would have got—the 2½ per cent. that is cut from his pay every year is not returned to him, which would be the case if he resigned voluntarily.

52788. I accept that from you. It is one of the things which I should have thought would have been most severely dealt with in your office, because it is so absolutely essential to afford some safeguard for the protection of the public against a charge being made by a police officer?—Yes. You see, it is not as if he had fabricated the whole of the circumstances at all, but he exaggerated.

52789. All that had happened as the justification for it was that apparently he told this gentleman who came to the station to go away or to move on, and that this gentleman said No, he had something to do, or he had a right to be there, and thereupon the constable asserted that he was shouting (and that is why I lay stress on this), and that he would be charged with disorderly conduct. It was also asserted in another case that that was the way in which the constable dealt with it; and that when a person asked him for his number in order to report him the constable at once arrested him, and in that case charged him with being drunk and disorderly. What I am suggesting to you is that that is one of those cases which ought to be most severely dealt with?—Yes; but my point is that it was severely dealt with. It was not "most severely dealt with." It would have been "most severely dealt with" if he had invented all the circumstances.

52790. There is a great difference between exaggeration and inventing the whole of the facts. I quite agree with that?—I quite agree with you that it has been the practice occasionally for them to magnify what they are pleased to call "shouting" into disorder. Of course, we try to stop that if we can, but you must make certain allowances, and you must discriminate between a wrongdoing, which denotes moral turpitude, and mere exaggeration.

52791. I agree; but it is very difficult to determine how far it is punishable?—The adjudication of punishment is the most difficult duty that one has to perform in those cases and in refusing applications for cab licences.

52792. It is only right, with the papers before me, I should point out that what appears to have been taken into account in that constable's favour, according to the Assistant Commissioner, is that he had been a very good constable up to that time, and that that was taken into consideration?—I think perhaps certain domestic things were taken into consideration.

52793. I think that was only taken into consideration in delaying the transfer?—Yes, but I think it was known at the time; and the transfer hit him particularly hard under the circumstances.

52794. I see what he said was, "Will you delay the transfer, as my wife is expecting to be confined?" and the Assistant Commissioner said, "Yes, I do not wish to put you to any hardship"?—It is a hardship for a man under those conditions to have his home broken up.

52795. What I am desirous of pressing upon you, and what I understand you to agree with, is that in many of these cases in which you find there is a charge made by a constable for which there is no foundation (it does not merely rest upon exaggeration) he ought to be dismissed?—Certainly.

52796. That is the only way in which to keep the force pure in these matters?—Absolutely; and we do. We always discriminate between exaggeration and invention.

52797. You would exercise discrimination in the case, for example, of a constable who was being cross-examined, and who, under the stress of cross-examination, said something which was not justified by what had taken place?—Quite.

52798. And in the case of a man who is inventing a story which he puts before the Court?—Quite.

52799. There is a very great difference, of course, in the way in which you would deal with two cases of that character?—Absolutely.

52800. I appreciate that you have to make a certain amount of allowance for human nature. When a man is being cross-examined he may perhaps go further than the facts warrant?—You have a very good knowledge of that, I am sure.

52801. I agree there is all the difference in the world between that case and the case of a man who starts with inventing a story?—Yes.

52803. Supposing in that case you find the man has obtained money by making a statement to the bookmaker that he required it for a charity, which was a lie, that is as great an offence as you can have, is it not?—Yes, certainly.

52804. If you will look at page 7 of Return 13 you will see the case I mean. I am only going to take one or two typical instances in the Return. The Return contains about 500 cases?—Yes. Of course most of them are anonymous, are they not?

52805. They are. Take pages 6 and 7. Take the third case from the bottom. It is under date of 15th March, 1906. You will see there that that is an authenticated charge. The charge was this. A person alleged against a constable that the constable had improperly solicited a subscription from the complainant, a bookmaker, for an illusive case of charity?—"The police-constable was reduced in pay 6s. a week for one year, severely reprimanded, cautioned, and transferred at his own expense." Without seeing the record of the inquiry it is very difficult for me to say whether that was a suitable punishment or not. I do not know how much was considered to have been proved.

52806. This Return which is submitted to us shows that the allegation was considered proved?—Yes. Of course, as you say, there are many hundreds of these cases, and of course I did not draw up these conclusions, but I shall be very happy to put the proceedings before you.

52807. I think it strikes you, as it strikes me, that, unless there was something exceptional in it, the punishment, although severe, was not adequate for the offence?—It was an illusive case. The man might say, "I am very hard up and I want the money to pay bills," or something like that.

52808. Obviously that is not what it means?—Of course it is very difficult for me to discuss the case without the papers.

52809. The Return says that the constable solicited a subscription from a bookmaker for an illusive case of charity?—The whole wording of that is done in the office, and it is rather difficult for me to answer you.

52810. It is not long ago?—No. I do not remember the case, but I can get the papers, and then I would be able to answer you. You see there are so many hundreds of these cases.

52811. Of course, this is a statement which has been filled in your office?—Yes.

52812. Assuming that that statement is correct, and that the words mean what they say, does it not strike you that it should be some very exceptional circumstance which would justify a man of that kind being kept in the force?—Yes. Probably there were some exception circumstances discovered as the result of inquiry.

52813. What puzzles me is to see what they could be?—I will send for the proceedings. I can get them quite easily.

52814. This is not a case in which there is any doubt about the allegation being proved according to this Return before us, and obviously something very serious was proved against him, because the punishment meted out is very severe, but, I suggest, not severe enough?—I think perhaps the proceedings would throw more light on it than even conjecture.

52815. It does require some explanation, does it not?—Yes. I shall be very happy to get the proceedings. Of course, you realise it would not be possible for me to pretend that I remember any of these cases. There are hundreds of them.

52817. You would have to arrive at your conclusion, generally speaking, I suppose, from some evidence of intimacy by the constable with a bookmaker, or of absenting himself from duty without being able to give a proper explanation, or of consorting with bookmakers or his associates. That is the way in which you would have to arrive at the facts, I suppose?—Yes. It seems to me that in that first case the allegation of receiving money could not be proved, but it was held that his conduct had been discreditable, inasmuch as he had associated with, and made a bet with, a bookmaker. He was reduced in pay 3s. per week for one year, severely reprimanded, cautioned, and transferred at his own expense.

52818. There apparently the allegation was considered not to have been proved—that is to say, the allegation of threatening to prosecute for street betting and receiving money for not reporting the bookmaker?—Yes.

52819. That was held to be, so far as receiving money and making the threat were concerned, not proved?—Yes.

52820. But, nevertheless, he was found guilty of discreditable conduct in associating with, and making a bet with, a bookmaker?—That was probably on his own admission that he had associated with him.

52821. That was an authenticated case in which you had a person making a statement of what had happened, namely, that the constable had threatened to prosecute complainant for street betting, and receiving money for not reporting him?—As it is not proved, we are obliged to give the man the benefit of the doubt, as they do in all courts.

52822. That we find occurring a good many times, naturally, in the course of the inquiries. In a case of that kind, where you have a complaint made by a person, and you make inquiry, and the policeman denies the fact of having received the money, but as the result of the inquiry, either from statements made by him or from what has been discovered, you do find that he has been guilty of this discreditable conduct referred to here, then you punish him for that?—Yes.

52823. But apparently you come to the conclusion that the case is not proved?—There is not sufficient to justify us in being quite certain that he did it.

52824. That brings me to one of the things I want to understand. You have a statement made there by a person, who comes forward and alleges that his statement is true about the police. What takes place upon that?—In some instances the person's written statement would be taken down, or he would be confronted with the constable. You had a case before you of a man called Platt, and what was done there illustrates, I suppose, the way in which many of these cases are dealt with.

52825. What I want to understand in that connection is what sort of an inquiry would be made on a charge of that kind?—The bookmaker would be seen by the Superintendent or the Sub-divisional Inspector; he would make a statement, and then he would probably be asked to repeat that statement in the presence of the constable. The constable would say what he had to say, and if the bookmaker had any witnesses they would endeavour to get the bookmaker's witnesses to come forward, but if he had not any witnesses, they would deal with it on probability; they would have to weigh one statement against the other. In nine cases out of ten it is a question of probability. I do not know what other course could be followed. I should be very glad to know how one could improve on it. It is a great difficulty.

52826. Suppose, for example, in a case of that kind, where you have a charge made against a constable of receiving money for not reporting a bookmaker, would not there be observation kept on the constable before he was called upon to answer?—Yes, for not reporting the bookmaker; that would be just the sort of case in which they would keep observation. There is great difficulty sometimes in getting persons to come forward. Now I had a case in point. A lady complained that as her daughter was walking along, a constable had pulled her hair, and said, "You are a pretty girl," or something like that. We endeavoured to get this lady's daughter to come forward, and I said if she would come forward it should all be done in my private room, but she would not come forward. The constable was dealt with all the same. The lady gave a description of the man, and we knew who was on point duty at that particular spot at the time, and the constable was dealt with and punished. The description the lady gave was that he was a pock-marked man. He appealed, and he said on appeal, "Will you allow me to put on my helmet?" I said, "Yes." He put on his helmet, and you could not see a single pock-mark on him. We were obliged to reverse the decision punishing him. Of course, the lady would not come forward to identify him, and we had to go upon her description.

52827. I can quite understand there would be serious difficulties, but in this case which I am putting to you, if observation were kept, I should have thought there would be a note made of it, "Inquiry made, observation kept," as is put in the second case on this page?—They generally keep observation in those cases.

52828. What kind of observation would be kept. Who would direct it?—The Superintendent or the Sub-divisional Inspector would pick out a man and say, "I want you to keep observation in plain clothes at such and such a place at such and such a time."

52829. Has the course ever been resorted to of sending some policemen in plain clothes from some other division to keep observation on a constable?—That is a very common practice, and it is nearly always done in these betting cases.

52830. It is not very much good, if you want to keep observation, to pick out a man who is in the same division?—They nearly always get a man from another division. Mr. Muskett, or any counsel who has had to deal with betting cases, will know all about that.

52831. Now take the next case, which is upon a complaint of the same person. There the charge against the constable was that he was concerned with another constable (that is the one I have been just referring to) in using threats towards the bookmaker, inducing him to pay a disputed bet to another constable, and lending him the money to do so?—He got less punishment than the other man in the same case.

52832. It was proved against him?—There is some explanation for it.

52834. The difficulty is it seems to show that we cannot rely very much with regard to these returns upon the statement of the case and the result of the case?—They were only compiled to enable you to call for the proceedings, otherwise the mass of proceedings would have swamped you altogether. By having a little analysis like that, if the case appeared to you to be unsatisfactory, then you could call for the proceedings. That was the idea of the thing. We got no instructions from you as to how it was to be prepared. It was prepared in the office with the object of giving you a bird's eye view of the whole thing, so that if in any case it appeared to you to be a case which you ought to look into, you could send for the proceedings.

52835. I do not think it necessary to go into them all, but should like, with reference to the three cases to which I have called attention, to have the papers so that we may get from the papers what the explanation is of what appears to be, you would agree with me, inadequate punishment?—Yes.

(Chairman.) At page 24 there is a case in which six constables were complained of, and the result was, "Observation kept, with the result that betting was detected and proceedings instituted."

Sir E. R. Henry.

1 Aug. 1907.

52836. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) There are just one or two cases before that that I wish to refer to.

52837. At pages 18 and 19 there is a case, the third from the bottom, which strikes me as a case which it is difficult to understand upon the materials we have before us. That is an authenticated case of a complaint made by a bookmaker of a threat to arrest him for betting, and then the constable subsequently receiving 2s. 6d. from the bookmaker. That is a kind of offence which when discovered must be most severely dealt with, must it not?—Yes.

52838. There can be no doubt that for every case that you do discover there must be a large number of cases that you do not discover?—Quite.

52839. One appreciates the difficulties you have to contend with, because they are most difficult cases to bring home, and the temptation is very great to the constable, but when you do get a case which is brought home to a man it should be most severely dealt with?—Yes.

52840. I find in that case where there was a threat to arrest the bookmaker, the bookmaker gave the policeman 2s. 6d., which he accepted?—He said so.

52841. I mean that is the charge?—Yes.

52842. It is said: "Inquiry made. Evidence as to receiving the bribe deemed inconclusive." Nevertheless, "it was held that the constable had not properly patrolled his beat, was in conversation with a bookmaker, and he had told falsehoods in connection with the case"?—That is what was proved against him.

52843. I am suggesting to you that, with those facts proved in the charge that was made, the evidence was not inconclusive?—As to receiving the bribe?

52844. Yes?—But then, as you know, a bookmaker would not hesitate to say he had given 2s. 6d. whether he had given it or not. Therefore why should you presume everything against the constable in this case?

52845. I am not suggesting that you should. I think it perfectly right you should not presume anything against him, but in a charge of this kind I am assuming that against the one man's statement you have nothing, and as regards the other man you find the constable has been doing wrong, and has been telling falsehoods in connection with that particular case. I am only suggesting to you that in that case there is no difficulty in arriving at the fact, but of course you would require absolute proof of the receiving of the money or an admission by the constable before you found the evidence conclusive?—I should require in a case like that as much proof as a Court would, because the punishment I should have to inflict on the constable would be infinitely greater than that which a Court would inflict. I should take away from him his livelihood altogether, and if he had a wife and children it would ruin them. Therefore I must have satisfactory proof. But when I have proof which I deem inconclusive I try to deal with them on a minor charge which is proved. I am in the same difficulty that a Court is often in.

52846. A Court would not be in a difficulty, I think, in a case of that character. I will tell you what strikes me as the result of going through the particulars I have before me, and I am putting it to you so as to get some explanation of it if you differ. You come to the conclusion, unless there is an admission by the constable that he has received the money, or unless there is some corroboration by other witnesses against the constable, that the evidence is inconclusive, forming an opinion as to whether it has taken place or not, and then the matter is dealt with upon some minor charge, and the constable is punished for that minor offence?—I do not quite accept that view. We punish the constable for what is proved. We cannot punish him for that which is not proved.

52847. Certainly not?—That is the state of affairs.

52848. What do you mean by "proved"?—If a bookmaker said he had given a constable 2s. 6d. I should not consider that proved.

52849. Of course not?—If the constable had told a lie about his patrol, I should not say that that was conclusive evidence that the bookmaker had been telling the truth and that the constable had been telling a lie about the 2s. 6d. I am always in that difficulty, and I think everybody who has tried cases had been in the same difficulty. That is the only explanation I can give. The proof that we do endeavour to emphasise our determination to prevent anything like corruption in the police force is very well exemplified in the case of the ex-Inspector who has been appealing to this Commission for redress. I dealt with that man myself. He was in receipt of a large salary, and close to his pension, and he was turned out. There are many other cases of that description.

52850. I am not suggesting to you for a moment that you do not punish persons, but I am speaking of the adequacy of the punishment. It is the system I am looking at. I am particularly concerned with the system of the inquiry. That is the point I want to get at. I want to see how far an attempt is really made to probe to the bottom these matters, and to see how far a decision is arrived at. Why I am putting these questions to you is because, looking through the Returns, it appears to me as if in many cases you come to a conclusion, by reason of the difficulties that you are placed in in ascertaining the facts, that the evidence is inconclusive, and the policeman is then punished for some minor offence?—Which is proved.

52851. Which is proved, of course, and which has arisen in consequence of a complaint, or by the discovery of it?—We give him the benefit of the doubt when we cannot remove the doubt.

52852. Of course, that would be right?—That is really what is reflected in that particular case. We gave him the benefit of the doubt, because the doubt could not be removed by other inquiry.

52853. That must depend, of course, upon whether the officer who is making the inquiry, and has to ascertain the facts, comes to a conclusion in his own mind as to which of the two is to be believed?—Yes.

52854. In all these cases where you are making inquiry whether a man has or not received a bribe, to get proof that the man was caught in flagranti delicto is very difficult?—Very, and the man who receives the bribe is an accomplice; I mean he is a tainted witness to begin with; he is an accessory, or he is an accomplice.

52855. One would have thought there was some way of finding out whether these things did take place. Let me make a suggestion to you. Is it not possible, if a bookmaker makes a charge of that kind, to lay a trap?—No, we do not lay traps.

52856. Do you not?—No.

52857. Do you mean in no cases?—I do not know what you call a "trap," but the police would not try to induce a man to break the law in that way.

52858. Let me be quite clear and explain about it. Suppose, for example, you are told by a bookmaker that a policeman is in the habit of receiving money from him for not reporting the bookmaker when he is committing an offence. You have to find out whether it is true. It is no use asking the policeman, because, of course, the policeman would say it was untrue. Then you would get no further?—Yes, we do.

52859. I say under those circumstances you would get no further. Suppose the bookmaker said he was in the habit of doing that, then somebody could keep observation to see whether it did take place?—That would always be done.

52860. Supposing the bookmaker said he was in the habit of giving it to him, you would say, "When do you give him money?" and he would say, "I give it to him at any time"?—That is the difficulty.

52861. Supposing that to be the case, would not some observation be kept if the bookmaker said, "I give him money once a week," or, "I will give him the money to-morrow, because that is his day"?—That is exactly what is done. Observation would be kept.

52862. Would observation be kept to ascertain whether the bookmaker did give him money?—Certainly, that would be done.

52863. That is the sort of thing I mean by asking whether it is not possible to lay a trap?—That would be done, as a matter of course, but when a bookmaker says, "On a particular date I gave a constable 2s. 6d." and the constable says, "No, you did not," we are rather in a difficulty.

52864. If it was one day it would be very difficult to find out?—This was one day. The moment they say there is habitual giving we ought to be able to find it out absolutely, and we probably would. Of course, we have dealt with a good many men for that sort of thing. As I say, in this case he said, "I gave a man 2s. 6d." The man said, "No, you did not."

52865. That is a very difficult thing to ascertain?—Absolutely impossible.

52866. That also is a case in which I should like to see the papers so as to see what actually was proved there?—Certainly.

52867. Now I will come to an authenticated complaint against six constables, as the Chairman has pointed out. That is at page 24. There was a definite statement by the complainant that the police were given so much every day. The complaint made there was that there were two men who were betting and who were standing at a certain place?—Yes.

52868. There observation was kept?—Yes.

52869. "With the result that betting was detected, and proceedings instituted . During the observation six constables were discovered to be in collusion with the bookmakers"?—In not reporting them, or in not running them in for betting.

52870. Yes. That means for a consideration?—I would not say that necessarily, but it probably might mean that.

52871. You would hardly say there was collusion, would you?—Betting might almost go on under a constable's eyes. The constable might see a street bookmaker, and he would not at once intervene because there must be certain conditions before he can intervene.

52872. You would not call that a case of a constable being in collusion?—No.

52873. There can be no mistake about this. If you look at it, there is no question about it. It is said, "Six constables were discovered to be in collusion with the bookmakers"?—Yes.

52874. Just see the punishment there. Four of them were reduced in pay 3s. a week for one year, and two of them were deprived of several day's pay, and they were all transferred at their own expense. When you discovered this state of things—the constables being in collusion with the bookmakers—there must have been some exceptional circumstances which justified those constables being kept in the force after that discovery?—As I say, it depends a good deal upon what was the outcome of the inquiry made. If they were merely apathetic it would be one thing, but if they were corrupt it would be another thing. I would like you to see the proceedings in that case before you form any opinion upon it.

52875. Why I am asking you these questions is that we may get the proceedings?—Again, if we take this statement to be correct it is merely a summary. I think you ought to see the proceedings.

52876. It is certainly a case that requires some explanation as it stands before us. It may be that the result is quite accurate, as you say, but as it stands before us, it does require explanation, does it not?—Yes.

52877. That is a case in which I think we ought to have the papers?—Yes. We have given you every complaint that has ever been put in.

52878. Of course, the point of giving us this Return was that we should see how many complaints had been made during the period, and the result of them. I am not making any complaint against the gentleman, whoever it is, who made this Return. He has endeavoured to summarise, as far as he can, into a few lines, the charge, and the result of the case?—Quite.

52879. You see it is the only material we have before us?—We have put the reference to the papers, so that you can have the papers.

52880. I have selected these cases as instances which I wanted to put to you, because it appeared to me, and I am glad you agree with me, that as they appear before us they require some explanation which we shall get from the papers?—Yes.

52881. It is unnecessary for me to go into the cases in detail, because I have selected a few cases which will be taken as instances?—Quite.

52882. In the same way Return 15 is a return giving particulars of complaints by members of the public against members of the force for demanding or accepting money or drink from, or consorting with, prostitutes or brothel keepers. This is another of that class of case in which it is most difficult to ascertain the truth?——

52883. Obviously the complaints are of the same character, to some extent, as the complaints in Return 13 in so far as the offence is somewhat difficult to prove?—Quite.

52884. I find on page 2, for example, that there is a charge which is made by an authenticated person, and it was found to be a false charge. I want to ask you about that. The hotels in the West End of London, and particularly this hotel, are visited by the police in the evening?—Yes.

52885. Would they be the same officers who would go round to visit these places?—No. The station officer would ordinarily have a constable with him, or a sergeant, for this duty, whoever he might be. There are six of them on station duty. They would take it in turns.

52886. Would it be the same inspector, or would it vary?—Of course, they would vary. The inspector would be at one time on day duty and at another time on night duty. At one time he would be on duty from 10 to 2, and at another time he would be on duty from 2 to 6, and so on, patrolling. Then the patrolling officer would take with him a sergeant for his own protection. That is the way in which all these licensed houses are visited.

52887. (Chairman.) I suppose an inspector can hardly avoid some conversation with the manager or other person in authority in the place?—No; I mean to say, he would be uncivil if he did.

52888. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) In these cases, dealing with the matter as it is before us, I suppose the same observations would apply. There are a number of complaints made?—I think as regards this, as it is for a period of ten years, the number is not at all large.

52889. It is nothing like so large as the number in the other Return. There are about 92 complaints, I think?—Nine a year.

52890. There are about 92 complaints during the whole period?—Yes. It is remarkably small considering the size of the Force; it is extraordinarily small.

52891. At the same time one must bear in mind that if there is any such thing going on the complaints would be few in number. The persons doing it would not be complainants. You have to bear that in mind?—The Return includes all anonymous complaints. The anonymous complaints are all put in here. I think myself it is very remarkable that there have not been more complaints. Nine complaints a year against so large a force does not represent much in the way of complaint.

52892. Comparing it with the number of complaints that are made with regard to bookmakers, it is very small?—Of course, complaints with regard to bookmakers would probably amount, I suppose, to quite one a week, or something like that.

52893. On the Returns which we have got, and dealing only, as both these Returns do, with complaints made by members of the public against members of the force itself, there are about 500 bookmakers' complaints, and about 92 of these complaints?—I wish to point out that a bookmaker who is convicted thinks nothing of sending in an anonymous complaint; it does not do any harm, but it is something more than a Parthian arrow, because it remains on record. The police, I think, last year got fines against them of £30,000.

52894. Against bookmakers?—Yes. They were fairly energetic.

52895. I suppose there is also this to be said, that amongst a certain number of the police a charge is looked upon as being serious?—And amongst members of the public, too.

52896. I do not wish to multiply the number of papers you will give us, but if you look at pages 6 and 7 you will see that the fifth case is an authenticated charge against a constable by a man and a woman, and the charge was that the constable had arrested the complainants improperly, it was said for indecent behaviour, and that he had afterwards released them on receiving 2s. from the man. There again you find this: "Inquiry was held. The evidence as to improper charges and receiving money was not considered conclusive, but as the constable was found to have improperly left his beat, making no report thereof, and as the explanation he put forward was considered unsatisfactory, his behaviour in consequence was deemed suspicious, and he was deprived of three days' pay and transferred to another division at his own expense"?—Yes, I do remember that man.

Sir E. R. Henry.

1 Aug. 1907.

I am glad to say he was caught afterwards, and his pension has been stopped. He went on pension, and he played the same game, he personated a police officer, then he was run in, and we stopped his pension. To the best of my recollection, we advised the Home Office to stop his pension and let him fight it out if he could.

52897. After he left the Police Force?—After he left the Police Force. It may have been quite a true case (that is the reflection I would make upon it), but at the same time we could not prove it. He got the benefit of the doubt, but he was always under suspicion, and after he left the Force he did the same thing, and this time he was caught, and we stopped his pension. I am speaking from memory, but I am confirmed in that view.

52898. That is an excellent instance, I think, of the way in which these matters are dealt with. There it was found that the evidence was not conclusive, but for the reasons given there, his behaviour was deemed suspicious?—Yes. I suppose something cropped up in that inquiry which appeared to be suspicious.

52899. What occurred to me in looking at that as a good instance was that you had the facts referred to there, and you had the persons who were making the charge before you, unless you set out with the determination that there must be corroboration by some independent witness?—No; you have to satisfy your conscience you have to be convinced that the evidence is correct. You cannot get away from that.

52900. Beyond reasonable doubt?—Beyond reasonable doubt. It depends upon the mind of the particular person dealing with it.

52901. I will tell you the difficulty I have in dealing with it. Looking at it as I do from the result of the cases, and the materials before us, it looks as if a person has to make up his mind, and once he does make it up, and he comes to the conclusion that it certainly looks very suspicious, he does not make up his mind definitely one way or the other upon the case, but he deals with the policeman, as here, upon behaviour which was found unsatisfactory?—Can he do more? If he cannot be conscientiously satisfied that the evidence is conclusive, what is he to do?

52902. I should have thought he could determine one way or the other, just as a jury would have to do?—They say, not guilty.

52903. That depends upon the case. This particular case which I am putting forward to you would seem to me to indicate to a great extent the way in which the difficulties are met. I am not finding fault with it, but I am trying to ascertain how the matters are dealt with?—I suppose some members of a jury will very often say one thing and some will say the other, and the process of exhaustion goes on, and a verdict is given one way or they disagree.

52904. There is another case of the same kind which you will find on pages 10 and 11, but they are only instances of what I am putting to you?—I can see no solution of the difficulty.

52905. I think if you will give us the papers I have asked for in the other case, it will make it unnecessary to go into this case, because the same observations will apply to both?—Yes.

52906. I think there is only one other matter I want to ask you about, and that is with regard to the suggestion you made yesterday as to some alteration with regard to calling for reports. Had you formed a conclusion before the inquiry that has taken place before us that the system of reporting might be improved upon?—Yes. I was quite dissatisfied with the system of calling for reports, because I found it did not lead to the officer on the spot coming to some sort of conclusion. I thought if he had to come to a conclusion he would have to press points upon the witnesses, and this would be more than taking statements, and he would be able to clear up doubts. When we simply get reports, all sorts of little points of difficulty arise which might well have been cleared up if the officers had been before one, because one could then put questions to them. Therefore I thought it did not take sufficiently the form of an inquiry.

52908. We have had some evidence from a superior officer that if the report which is made by the constable does not agree with the Inspector's view, it would be sent back to the constable?—I did not know that; I thought he said the report made was not to the point, or something of that sort; I never knew that at all. I know they have often torn up reports that have been brought in badly written, and so on. What you now say has not come within my knowledge at all.

52909. (Chairman.) I think it was stated in the evidence of Inspector McKay?—I will take it from you, of course. I think I know what he meant. I think he meant that very often the reports brought in are torn up because they are not to the point.

52910. (Mr. Rufus. Isaacs.) No?—I am bound to say it is not a matter I have ever inquired into. I can only say what I think should and should not be done.

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) My impression is that if the Inspector thought there was something in it that he did not agree with, he would not accept it.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is my recollection. Certainly I remember putting the question to him. I said, "If you send it back to the constable, and you are his superior officer, and you thought the constable did not agree with it, what do you think the constable would do?" That, I think, was the substance of the question I put, but I need not trouble to search for it now.

52911. As far as you are concerned, do you approve of that?—No, not at all, certainly not.

(Chairman.) Look at page 158. Inspector Mckay was recalled. At question 6511 I asked him: "I understand your signing it does not necessarily mean that you agree with the report, but it is simply to identify it?—(A.) Yes, that is so." Then Mr. Rufus Isaacs asked him: "And it is important from your point of view to point out that the complaint that was made with regard to unfair treatment was with regard to Altfuldisch and not with regard to Ruppert and Mander?" Inspector McKay's answer is: "That is so. The difficulty is this, we are often found fault with in cases where we have to give evidence on these reports. Counsel very often raises objection if we tell a person what to say or ask him to make out more than one report. It is a very difficult matter, when we are dealing with reports of constables especially, to get them to keep to the point you want."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) There is a good deal of evidence upon it, because Inspector McKay gave his evidence very frankly, and we have arrived from his evidence at what does seem to take place.

(Chairman.) I gathered from the evidence that a constable, not being very much used to writing things, would very often make a report and when he had made his report it would be found that he had not touched really on the material point.

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I cannot say that that is my recollection of it at all. That is one point of it. The impression upon my mind was that if the report of the constable did not agree with the view of the facts taken by the Inspector, the report was sent back.

(Chairman.) We must read the evidence, and we must each draw our own conclusions as to what Inspector McKay said.

(Witness.) I think if Inspector McKay said that he did not mean that.

52912. (Chairman.) The impression upon my mind is that the report was sometimes so badly written that it was useless?—Yes.

52913. And that the Inspector then treated the constables in something like the way that a schoolmaster treats a pupil?—Yes.

52914. I thought that was the suggestion?—Yes. I am sure that is what he intended to say.

52915. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I am not suggesting for a moment that Inspector McKay was not saying what he believed to be true, but the impression certainly upon my mind was that if the view of the facts presented to him disagreed with the view of the facts which he himself had taken with regard to it, the report was sent back, or the constable was asked about it by the Sub-divisional Inspector?—I think that would be a very wrong practice indeed.

52916. The way in which I dealt with it generally was this. I asked him: "Supposing you did send a report back, what do you think the constable would do, bearing in mind that you are his superior officer, if he did not agree with it?" That, I think, brought out the suggestion?——

(Chairman.) At question 6562 I asked him "Would you point out in what way you thought it ought to be corrected?—(A.) I would point out what occurred, being the person present there at the time, and knowing actually what did occur. I would simply call his attention to those facts. If he agreed with them would be a matter entirely for himself. (Q.) Suppose he took the view that your recollcetion was wrong and that his was right, what would happen then?—(A.) I would not have power to order him to alter his report contrary to his recollection."

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) At question 6564 the Chairman asked him: "You would not have power to order him to alter his report, but what would happen, do you think?—(A.) Such a thing has occurred. (Q.) I suppose his recollection would in the end agree with yours if you were his superior?—(A.) Not necessarily. (Q.) Not necessarily, but most likely?—(A.) I have several officers who do not hold the same opinion as I do."

(Mr. R. D. Muir.) Will you kindly look at question 6559?

(Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) "Supposing Inspector Remfry had stated in this report, for example, that Mr. Altfuldisch had behaved quite quietly, entered the station quietly, and gave no trouble, and that disagreed entirely with your view, what would happen then?—(A.) I would not take it like that. I would certainly have some comment to make upon it." That entirely justifies my recollection with regard to it.

52917. He said if he did not agree with the facts he would not take it like that?—He would be quite right in making comment upon it. Of course, he would be quite wrong in not taking a constable's report.

52918. He said: "I would not take it like that." This is the passage which impressed me. It is at question 6560. "You would send the report back to him. Would you see him about it?—(A.) I would see him, certainly. (Q.) Would you point out that you did not agree with him?—(A.) I would." That bears out what I was saying. "Would you point out in what way you thought it ought to be corrected?—(A.) I would point out what occurred, being the person present there at the time, and knowing actually what did occur."

53919. (Chairman.) Look at the answer he gave me at question 6552. "I should have thought," I said, "that in your covering report you would have referred to the fact. Supposing a constable in the report makes a statement of fact which to your knowledge or in your opinion may be inaccurate, do you not make any report on that in your covering report?—(A.) I would get him"—(that is, the constable)—"to alter it. I would not take it from him if I knew it was wrong." That is the thing that gave rise to the discussion. What do you say to that?—I think that is quite wrong.

52920. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) That is why I wanted to put it to you. It seems to show that that system did prevail to some extent, but how far, of course, we do not know?—I was not aware of it.

52921. Apparently the reports are sent by the constables and are then sent in to the superior officer who countersigns them?—Yes.

52922. What is the point of countersigning them?—Everything has to go through the Superintendent. We never receive any reports or letters or any communication direct from a constable. It always has to come through a sort of official channel.

52923. What I suggest to you is that by this system if the superior officer does point out to a constable that he is wrong, and the constable's recollection is not in accordance with the superior officer's view, it is not very likely that the constable will stand out against his superior officer?—No, it is not.

52924. That would really lead to the constable adopting the superior officer's views of the facts, and of the report being a report of what the superior officer thought had occurred, and not of what the constable thought had occurred?—It is open to that criticism, certainly.

52925. What I wanted to see was how that could be prevented. That is why I draw attention to it. I understand that you disapprove of that course being taken?—Quite.

52926. I want to see how the course which you suggest would meet that difficulty which was present to my mind when you were making that suggestion yesterday. If a superior officer were to take a statement direct from the witness it would get over the difficulty which you have pointed out, of the constable very often not knowing how to write what he wants to say, and to make it in clear language?—Of course, if he signed the statement he would be practically responsible for it.

52927. No doubt, and so he would if he sent in a report. There is nothing to indicate to you when you receive the report that there has been some alteration made in it by the police constable in consequence of the superior officer's comment?—Nothing.

52928. That is the difficulty. You are not really getting the recollection of the constable at all?—It is much the same difficulty that you have in all cases, because, as I understand, witnesses are taken to a solicitor, who takes a statement from them, talks to them about it, and so on, and what you get is not the statement of the witness first hand at all when he comes into court; he has been interviewed by a solicitor. There is no getting over that.

52929. That does not seem to me quite the same thing?—It is in a sense. You do not get the statement first hand if a witness is interviewed by anybody before he comes into court.

52930. The statement you get from a witness is a statement of what the witness will say when he is called in the witness box, but what I am asking you about is something which seems to me different from that. It is a report which a constable makes upon which you act?—Yes.

52931. And it is the only material upon which, as I understand, you can act?—Quite.

52932. Therefore it is essential that you should have, as far as possible, the direct recollection of the constable?—Yes. Now, the difficulty is to adopt steps which will secure that.

52933. You see also, as it appeared to us, and as we know from some of the reports which were presented to us, constables, or some of them, when making out their reports, compare them together?—We try to guard against that.

52934. That is equally difficult, too?—That is equally difficult. You have always the same difficulty whenever you have a number of witnesses thrown together.

52935. What I wanted to see is how far the suggestion you made of the superior officer taking a statement direct from the constable would in any way affect these two points which have occurred to us during the course of this inquiry?—The way in which I put it is this: The Inspector who is concerned with the case ought not to hold that inquiry. An officer who is not concerned with the case might be considered to be fairly impartial.

52936. I am not committing myself to anything, I am only dealing with is as it occurs to me arising on the questions I have put to you; but do you see any objection to this in practice; would there be any difficulty in the police constables making their repor? and sending them direct to your office without their having to go before either the Sub-divisional Inspector or Superintendent?—Of course, the Superintendent ought to know everything that is going on in his division. I think that would be showing a great want of confidence in the Superintendent.

52937. Supposing it were sent to the Superintendent, would there be any reason why it should go before the Sub-divisional Inspector?—Not the slightest, but the interests of discipline must not be lost sight of.

52938. I will tell you why I put the question to you. It has occurred to me again and again in looking at the reports which have been presented to us that they are always countersigned, I think, by the Sub-divisional Inspector and by the Superintendent?—Quite.

Sir E. R. Henry.

1 Aug. 1907.

52939. I do not understand what the necessity for that is?—The Sub-divisional Inspector has to know what is going on in his little area. The Sub-divisional Inspector at an out-station is responsible for everything that goes on in his area, and he countersigns the report to show that he is cognisant of the contents.

52940. Let me point out a difficulty, as it appears to me, in that system. Suppose some complaint is made by a person of what has taken place in the charge-room against the Sub-divisional Inspector, and the constables who were present were called upon to make their reports, those reports to their knowledge must go before the Sub-divisional Inspector. How can you expect them to make a report which would prejudicially affect the Sub-divisional Inspector with his superiors?—In fact, that would be an exceptional case where a Sub-divisional Inspector was concerned, and in that case the constables' reports might very well go direct to the Superintendent.

52941. And they ought to?—Yes, certainly. There would be no objection to that at all. But in the ordinary way of business it is desirable that the Sub-divisional Inspector should know what is going on in his area.

52942. That would be an objection to this method of superior officers taking the reports direct from the constables?—Not necessarily, because you could send a man from another station to do it.

52943. Suppose, for example, you had some department which dealt particularly with all complaints. Then the officer who would go to receive such statements would be an officer whose business it was to take them, and to have nothing whatever to do with the particular division or station in respect of which the complaint was made. Do you think that would lead to a more satisfactory state of things?—I think it might. It might do good. It is very difficult to express an opinion upon a system of reconstruction like that, but I should think it might be advantageous. Of course, in holding an inquiry, local knowledge is very often of importance, and the man on the spot has the local knowledge, and of course, if you bring a man in from anywhere else he has not got the local knowledge, but it may be that the advantage gained might more than balance the disadvantage.

52944. The most important element is to get a statement to you, which is the statement upon which you have to act, directly without the intervention of any other person who may be interested?—Yes.

52945. That is the point of it?—But if a charge were made against a Sub-divisional Inspector he would not hold the inquiry, that is quite certain.

52946. No, but nevertheless, if a complaint is made which affects or which may affect the Sub-divisional Inspector, under your present system the reports are called for from police constables, those reports do come before the Sub-divisional Inspector, and he has to examine them?—Yes, unless the Superintendent or Chief Inspector went out and held the inquiry.

52947. But he does not hold the inquiry until he has had the reports?—He might quite well. I think in many cases statements are taken.

52948. When a Superintendent is directed to hold an inquiry?—We send all the papers to him. He is directed to make an inquiry. He is empowered to delegate it, but he ought himself to make it; he either delegates it or makes it himself, and exercises his judgment. If the Sub-divisional Inspector were affected by the complaint, of course, he would be quite wrong if he allowed the Sub-divisional Inspector to have any part in the inquiry at all.

52949. I was not thinking of those cases. I was dealing with the cases in which written reports are sent in as to which I feel there is very great difficulty in providing some system which would obviate the difficulties that occur to us?—Reports are not so much taken now as they used to be. More inquiries are held; that is to say, statements are taken.

52950. Suppose, for instance, a question is asked in the House of Commons, the result of that is the Home Secretary calls for reports from you?—Yes, he would refer the question to me. They do not generally direct me to make an inquiry. They generally refer the papers to me.

52951. In order to get your assistance so as to get information from you upon which the answer can be given?—Quite.

52953. Take, for instance, the Gerothwohl case. There questions were asked, the matter was referred to you, and you called for reports?—Yes, but we did more than that. We also had the officers up.

52954. I know reports were made by the constables, which, as we know, went before the Sub-divisional Inspector, and had to be countersigned by him?—Of course ,there was a charge against them of perjury and conspiracy, and in an ordinary way you would always hear what they had to say, but, independently of that, they were separately interrogated by the Assistant Commissioner, who had them up in his room.

52955. That was after you had the reports?—Yes.

52956. Those reports that were called for in that case would go before the Sub-divisional Inspector under the present system?—Yes.

52957. My difficulty is to see how the course suggested by you would obviate the difficulties that occur to us?—By precautions being taken that the officer who held the inquiry was in no way affected by the result. That is the only way I can see.

52958. That might be met in the same way by the reports being sent direct to the Superintendent or to a person unaffected?—Yes.

52959. (Chairman.) I have only one or two questions to ask you which have been mainly suggested by the questions of my honourable and learned friend. The Returns upon which he has been examining are Returns of cases in which the complaints have been made by members of the public?—Yes.

52960. I might just call your attention to that in order that it may be made clear upon our notes. You not only deal with cases of alleged misconduct against constables where the complainant is a member of the public, but you also deal with complaints which are preferred by superior officers?—Yes.

52961. And in Returns 14 and 16 which you have sent in there is similar information given to us as the result of the complaints which have been made during the period covered by the Returns by superior officers. Am I right in thinking that the kind of jurisdiction that you exercise in these matters is a disciplinary jurisdiction?—Yes, it is.

52962. Is that how you would describe it in general?—Yes.

52963. I am asking you because it occurs to me that possibly you might say that the same principles of punishment do not apply to the case of a superior officer who is dealing with members of an ordinary force as those which apply to the case of an ordinary force according to the law of the land?—I quite agree.

52964. Do you suggest that that is the case?—That is so.

52965. Do you regard yourself rather as a superior officer of an army or the superintendent of a vast organisation of men carrying on civil business?—Yes.

52966. What strikes me is this: The misconduct which is alleged, it does not matter whether it is alleged by a superior officer or by a member of the public, against a constable may come into two categories—it may be misconduct which involves a breach of the law of the land, or it may be misconduct which involves simply a breach of the constable's duty which arises in consequence of the particular position of the accused as a police constable?—Quite so.

52967. I am not quite clear how you deal with the first class of misconduct. We have had cases in which the complaint has been that the constable had assaulted a prisoner improperly, or had assaulted somebody else. When a complaint reaches you, supposing a member of the public writes to you, do you ever set the law in motion yourself. Do you ever yourself apply for a summons against a constable at a police-court?—I think I can remember three cases which will illustrate my practice. In one case a constable brought a charge against a working man, I believe, which the Magistrate who tried the case thought was altogether false, and he represented to the Commissioner that he thought this was a false charge. An inquiry was held, and, as a result, we applied for process for perjury against that constable. The constable was tried and convicted by a jury, and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment. That is one of the cases which this Commission has been urged to take up. That was Rolls' case. Here the constable invented the circumstances, according to our inquiry. The next case was one in which the Magistrate, Mr. Hopkins, commented on the evidence of two constables, and held that they had given exaggerated, and therefore, to that extent, false evidence. We made an inquiry in that case, and we came to the conclusion that it would be of no use applying for process for perjury, because it would never go through, but we were quite satisfied they had given exaggerated evidence, and they were both turned out of the force. The third case that I would mention is this: A man was charged with having put out the lights of lamps about 5 o'clock in the morning, or at some time like that. The evidence was that two constables had seen this man and his brother, and they saw one of them go up a lamp-post and put out the light. They ran round a corner, and the constable followed as fast as he could, and he found two men; he was quite certain they were the same two men, and one of them was charged—the taller or the shorter one—and the case was dismissed in court because the Magistrate was not satisfied. Looking through the reports, we saw it said somewhere that a milkman was at the other end of the square, so we thought, as we had a letter from this accused person saying he certainly had not done it, that the milkman might throw some light on the question, and the Superintendent was directed to interview this witness. He went and got hold of the milkman, who said, "My boy tells me that your constables arrested the two wrong men; those two went up an alley, and these other two who came along were not in any way responsible." We at once wrote to the aggrieved person and told him, "These people quite support your view, but we are perfectly satisfied that these constables acted in good faith; there is no doubt whatever about it, and as we consider you have been aggrieved we apologise to you for it," and ultimately, I may say, we paid all their expenses. That rather indicates the sort of lines upon which we deal with those sort of cases. There are three different stages—a case in which a constable has invented the circumstances, a case in which he has embroidered his evidence, or exaggerated it, and a case in which he had given wrong evidence not knowing he was giving wrong evidence.

52968. That leads me to ask you this. In your dealing with those cases you have no power to give any redress?—If any member of the public is aggrieved we pay them compensation very often; it is paid out of the Police Fund. I am thinking now, for instance, of the case of an old lady who was walking along when a policeman was chasing a burglar, and the burglar knocked her over, and smashed her spectacles. We are going to pay for them. We do give redress when we can.

52969. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) She is to get a new pair of spectacles?—Certainly. I think it quite a legitimate charge on the Police Fund.

52970. (Chairman.) No action can be brought against you as Chief Commissioner or against the Police Force as a whole because one particular constable has misconducted himself?—I think not, and I hope not.

52971. We start with that. In all the cases do you advise the Home Secretary to give redress out of the Police Fund? We have not had that explained to us. On what principle do you advise the Home Office?—The view I take of it is this. The law contemplates that the Police Fund shall be liable for damage that is done under, for instance, the Riot (Damages) Act. There is a case in point. They say, "Your police precautions were not sufficient, somebody's shop was damaged, and you are liable." We apply that principle very liberally. For instance, if a constable is taking a prisoner along and a shop window is broken we pay for that, although it is not the fault of the constable. You quite understand I cannot spend a penny without sanction. All I can do is to make a recommendation to my responsible chief.

52972. So much for redress. Now with regard to punishment. The punishment that you can inflict is somewhat limited, is it not. You cannot send a man to prison?—No, but what is worse than that we can turn him out of the Force.

52973. You can reduce his pay, or transfer him from one division to another, which will involve him in expense, or you can dismiss him from the Force?—Yes, perhaps when he is within a year or a month of his pension. Our powers of punishment are very, very great.

52974. Upon what general principle do you apportion punishment? Do you feel yourself at all to be at liberty to take into account not only all the circumstances of the case, but the general character of the constable in question?—The view I take is that the only punishment we can inflict is pecuniary punishment. The view I take is that you should not run the risk of forcing a constable to resort to illicit means of supplementing his income. You must leave him enough to live on; you cannot punish him below that.

52975. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You mean with regard to a reduction of pay?—Yes. It is the only ultimate punishment we can inflict.

52976. (Chairman.) As far as I can see, the real punishments are either a reduction of pay or dismissal from the force?—Practically, or of course, transfer, which comes to the same thing. It is a pecuniary mulct in some form.

52977. In deciding what to do in each case you think yourself entitled, I presume, to take into account the character of the constable?—Yes.

52978. Supposing, for instance, there is a grave case proved absolutely against a man, but he has for years been a valuable member of the force, and is likely to be still a valuable member of the force, you would take that kind of fact into consideration in the terms of the punishment?—Yes. I had a case quite recently in which a constable borrowed money from a publican, and it looked very black indeed, but the publican was not anywhere within his district at all, and it turned out that the publican was an old constable, they were great friends, and this constable borrowed money from him as one friend would from another. I had to take that view. He was a constable of very good character; he wanted money for a very good purpose—to spend on the education of his children, and he borrowed it from an old friend who had a public-house in a district at some distance. I did not deal with him as a man who had borrowed money from a publican.

52979. On the whole, your way of dealing with cases is not quite that of a Court of Justice. There is something more paternal about it?—Yes, I hope so. I know the temptations constables are exposed to, and I know the stress under which they work.

52980. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) At all events, you know the nature of the charge. You have also to bear in mind the danger to the public of having charges preferred by a policeman with regard to which, primâ facie, one would presume that the police are right?—I have said that in any case where moral turpitude is connoted we dismiss the man; there are no half measures there at all.

52981. In a case of that kind, whatever the good service that may have been done by the constable, and however valuable the officer may be, you would not keep him?—No, not if he was within a day of his pension; he would be turned out.

52982. (Chairman.) There is one question that I should like to ask you, although it is rather going back, and that is about the proceedings in the charge room. It has been suggested to us that there might be an improvement in the present system if the prisoner, when leaving the police station, were allowed to ask for a copy of the entry in the charge sheet?—Do you think it would be any advantage?

52983. I am asking your opinion upon it. That has been suggested to us?—I think the magistrates told you that they do not trouble about the police charge at all; they only go on the facts.

52984. What the magistrates told us was that the entry in the charge sheet was in no sense a proceeding in the court, but that it was information acquired for police purposes, and that it was made under statute, but that when the case came into court they were entitled to listen to any charge which the constable might make upon oath, and produce some evidence of?—Quite so.

52985. Do you think if a man asked for a copy of the charge in the charge sheet he ought to be allowed to have it?—When a man tenders his name at a police station it is accepted without any scrutiny. He might give somebody else's name—and they do occasionally—and I think it would be rather unpleasant for that other man if there was an authentic copy of the charge made against him in black and white of having been drunk and disorderly when he was never drunk and disorderly in his life.

52986. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) But that would not be so objectionable as seeing his name in the daily papers the next day?—No, but still this might be used years afterwards, and he would not know it was being used.

52987. (Chairman.) I do not think the suggestion involves giving all the particulars that are entered in the charge sheet. I think the point of the suggestion is this, that the prisoner, on leaving the station, ought to receive exact information as to what charge he has got to meet. I suppose the suggestion was made because, in one or two cases, we have found that ultimately the charge which is dealt with at the police court is not the charge in the charge sheet at all?—No.

52988. Do you see any objection to a compliance with such a request?—No, it only means a little more writing. I think we should have to be careful about the names, because, as I say, it would be very embarrassing for a man perhaps to have years afterwards this extract produced in which his name would appear as having been charged with being drunk and disorderly, or with some offence.

52989. You mean there is a possibility of the privilege being abused? Yes. It is a matter that requires a good deal of consideration.

52990. Then I take it you are not prepared to give an unqualified answer to that suggestion?—No. It is a sort of thing that I should like to think over.

52991. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) I suppose there would be no necessity to give his name?—No.

52992. I quite appreciate the danger that there might be in giving it which you suggest, but the system might be adopted of not giving the name at all.

(Chairman.) A copy might be given to the prisoner after he had been bailed, if he asks for it.

52993. (Mr. Rufus Isaacs.) You could connect him by number, could you not?—Yes.

52994. You could give a number without giving the name?—That seems to me unobjectionable, so long as you leave out the name.

52995. (Chairman.) I apprehend that the Inspector, if he were asked by a prisoner: "What is the exact charge?" would have to read the entry to him, would he not?—Yes. So far as I know, he always reads the entry—"The charge against you is that you did at such and such a time, on such and such a date," and so on.

52996. But that is done at a time when the prisoner may be supposed to be somewhat excited. The point of the thing is that when he has been in the cell, and ultimately is bailed out, and is leaving the station, he might say, "Tell me exactly what I am charged with"?—And the Inspector would be very wrong if he did not do so.

52997. You say now you think he would tell him?—Certainly, I am sure he would tell him.

52998. You used a phrase: "The Home Office refers the papers to me." I do not think we have had that defined yet. What do you mean?—They very often send me over their file with "Commissioner for observations," or some entry of that sort. I do not get a letter asking me to make inquiries. I do not remember getting one. It is not the rule at all. I would not like to be too precise.

52999. As I understand, the usual communication is, "We enclose you papers in regard to such-and-such a case, and we shall be glad if you will make any observations"?—Yes—"Commissioner will favour with observations." Then I look into it.

53000. That is what you mean by the phrase "The Home Office refers the papers to me"?—Yes.

53001. (Chairman.) We are very much obliged to you, Sir Edward, for your attendance and for your evidence?—Thank you.

I.—DOCUMENTS IN PARTICULAR CASES.

GEROTHWOHL AND LAVALETTE'S CASE.

Produced as and Sworn to be a correct Copy of Note-book at Police Court by the Clerk, Mr. C. H. Denyer.
John Leslie.
23rd July 1906.

COPY of the NOTES OF EVIDENCE in the case of MORRIS GEROTHWOHL, HENRI LAVALETTE and CHARLES TIMMINGS, heard at Marlborough Street Police Court on the 9th day of April, 1906, before G. L. DENMAN, Esq., one of the Magistrates of the Police Courts of the Metropolis then and there sitting.

P.C. 43 C.R., on his oath, saith as follows:—

At 12.10 a.m. on the 8th of April I saw the three prisoners in Piccadilly, all drunk and shouting. I spoke to them in Piccadilly. They went on doing the same. At the station they made no reply to the charge. The doctor was afterwards called at 2.30 a.m. to see Gerothwohl and Lavalette, who were not then drunk.

Cross-examined: There was a good deal of noise about. These three were arm in arm with others. I first took Timmings, and then Lavalette. Timmings had not fallen down. I heard no protest against Timmings being taken into custody.

I am not sure I took Lavalette into custody in Piccadilly. They were not arrested in Vine Street.

I did not hear they asked for a second doctor to be sent for.

I swear they were all drunk.

P.C. 6 C.R., on his oath, saith as follows:—

At 12.10 a.m. on the 8th of April I took Gerothwohl. He was drunk. They were all three with many others. The three were arm in arm with two others, five in a row.

Cross-examined: I did not see Timmings fall

Gerothwohl was second from the kerb. I told him I arrested him as being drunk and disorderly, and he walked under arrest.

His stick was broken in the police station. He refused to give it up. He lifted it as if to strike. It was broken in taking it from him. They made no reply when charged.

Remanded to the 11th April.

Produced as and Sworn to be a correct Copy of Note-book at Police Court by the Clerk, Mr. Witherington.
John Leslie,
23rd July 1906.

COPY of the NOTES OF EVIDENCE in the case of MORRIS GEROTHWOHL, HENRI LAVALETTE and CHARLES TIMMINGS, heard at Marlborough Street Police Court on the 11th day of April, 1906, before G. L. DENMAN, Esq., one of the Magistrates of the Police Courts of the Metropolis then and there sitting.

Walter Berry, Inspector C, on his oath, saith as follows:—

I was in charge of Vine Street Police Station at 12.15 a.m. on the 8th of April, when prisoners were bought in. The constables said they were arm-in-arm in Piccadilly, and they were arrested. Gerothwohl said: "I was on the way to the station when the constable arrested us. I was going to give my card in to speak about Timmings' arrest.

Lavalette said: "That is so."

The constables said they arrested them in Piccadilly. In my opinion all were drunk. When I read over the charge none of them denied it. They were taken to the cells at 12.45. Gerothwohl and Lavalette asked for Dr. Steward to be sent for. He was telegraphed for, but refused to attend. I told defendants that, and offered Dr. Mitchell. They consented, and he came and examined them at 2.30. Directly after Dr. Mitchell saw them they were bailed.

Cross-examined: They were brought in at 12.15, and at once protested about being there with great warmth. They said they were coming to speak about Timmings being badly treated. They didn't say they were arrested close to the station. Both constables said they were arrested in Piccadilly.

Gerothwohl gave me his card when arrested. I say they were drunk. I say so by their behaviour. They smelt of drink. I went near them when they were bought in. There was a great commotion. I smelt their breath directly they were put in the dock. I was then standing by the dock. I can't say what liquor the smell was of. They remained in the cells till Dr. Mitchell saw them. They didn't ask to see two gentlemen, but only Dr. Steward.

The request was conveyed to me, and I sent a police message. On getting the reply I told defendants Dr. Mitchell was at the station. They consented to see him. I saw them leave after the examination. They were not drunk then. I won't say they were sober. When brought in they couldn't walk straight. They talked thickly. I didn't notice how Lavalette pronounced the letter "a."

Alexander Mitchell, M.D., on his oath, saith as follows:—

I am Divisional Surgeon, C Division. I examined Gerothwohl at 2.30 a.m. on the 8th instant at Vine Street. His pupils were abnormally dilated and inactive to light. The whites of his eyes were congested. His lips looked parched. Breath smelt of drink. He appeared to have had whisky. He was not drunk then, but was recovering from the effects of drink. I examined Lavalette at about 2.45 a.m. on same day. His condition was similar to Gerothwohl's. He was sober, but recovering from the effects of drink.

Cross-examined: I asked Gerothwohl what liquor he had had. He said he had one beer and one whisky. I don't remember his saying he had it at dinner. I don't remember his saying he had a brandy and soda about 11 p.m.

One whisky and one beer would not account for his condition as I saw him. At 2.30 a.m. Gerothwohl's breath smelt of whisky. One glass of whisky would not have accounted for that smell. The parching of the lips would not be accounted for by their having been annoyed and indignant and excited two hours before. Their condition could only be accounted for by excessive drinking.

Thomas Divers, P.C. 427 C, on his oath, saith as follows:—

Soon after 12 on Sunday morning I was in Sackville Street. Owing to shouts I went to Piccadilly, where P.C. 43 C handed me over Timmings. At the station he was charged with the others.

Cross-examined for Gerothwohl and Lavalette: I saw nothing of the affair. Except that I took Timmings. The other two followed close. There was a great row as the other two were violent. I can't say what remark Gerothwohl and Lavalette made at the station.

Re-examined: Timmings did not dispute being drunk.

DEFENCE.

Morris A. Gerothwohl, on his oath, saith as follows:—

I live at 8, Alma Terrace, W. I am a resident at Trinity College, Dublin. I am a lecturer in French there. I am a member of the Royal Society of Literature. I am Examiner in French to the Welsh Education Board. I am staying with Lavalette. On the evening of the 7th I dined at the Café Monico. My bill is produced. We had a glass of lager each. That is all we had at dinner. After it we went to a café in Soho, where they roast coffee. We had a coffee and lemonade, and went and looked at Soho Market. On our return we met Mr. Sherrington about 10.45 p.m. at the end of Regent Street. We all went to the Trocadero, where we each had whisky and soda. Mr. Sherrington and I had a conversation about Trinity College and compulsory Greek. Mr. Lavalette discussed the question of a commercial university. We went down Piccadilly. Then to St. James's Church. Mr. Sherrington had left us then. We got to St. James's Church a little after 12. There was a good deal of rowdyism. Some young men were forming a circle arm-in-arm. The police moved them on. They were shouting. I was not arm-in-arm with Mr. Lavalette. Mr. Timmings was in front of us. I saw 43 C push Timmings forward and force him against a cab-wheel. I followed P.C. 43 with Lavalette, intending to give our card to the Inspector at the station. Just before reaching Vine Street Police Station door we saw some police. As I put my foot on the step I was caught from behind and pushed in by 43 C, who shoved me about until I found myself in the dock. I was excited and furious, and offered my card. I was charged with being drunk and disorderly. I challenge the Inspector's decision that I was drunk. I had my stick in my hand. I saw 43 C drag it from my hand and smash it over his knee. After that I was put in the cells. I asked for paper to write on, but didn't get it. I asked for Dr. Steward and Dr. Graves to be sent for. Dr. Mitchell examined me and made me walk. I wasn't by any means under liquor. The glass of beer and whisky was all the liquor I had.

Henri Lavalette, on his oath, saith as follows:—

I live at 8, Alma Terrace. Last witness is staying with me. I am a journalist. I was out at dinner that evening. I had one glass of lager beer. The drink bill is produced. We then went to a little café and had some coffee and lemonade, and we went to Soho French quarter and listened to a temperance lecturer. After that we met Mr. Sherrington, whom I introduced to last witness. We went to the Trocadero and all three had a glass of whisky and water, remaining about three-quarters of an hour. Mr. Sherrington then left us. At St. James's Church there was much rowdyism. I saw 43 C.R. pushing Timmings. We thought it unjust. He fell against a cab-wheel. Last witness said he would give evidence for him. We went to the station, at the door of which I was violently seized by a constable and violently thrown against other constables, and finally found myself in the dock. We sent in our cards to the Inspector. I agree with Dr. Gerothwohl. I was examined by Dr. Mitchell. All the liquor I had was the glass of beer and the whisky I have mentioned. After leaving the station we went to Dr. Davis, who examined us, as did Dr. Walker.

Mr. Sherrington, B.L., on his oath, saith as folllows:

I live at 10, New Court, Lincoln's Inn. I have met Lavalette on several occasions. On the 7th inst. I met him and Gerothwohl about 10.45 p.m. at the corner of Regent Street. I talked to them 10 or 15 minutes. We went to the Trocadero. There we had a discussion about compulsory Greek. I asked was Kotobos still published. Mr. Lavalette suggested we should have a whisky together.

We went to the Trocadero and had some whisky, and had some more talk about universities. When I left them they did not seem to have the slightest trace of excessive drinking.

Gerothwohl and Lavalette discharged; Timmings fined 10s.

Inspector Walter Berry (C Division), sworn.

(Witness.) I was in charge of Vine Street Police Station at a quarter past 12 on Sunday morning. The three prisoners were brought in by two police constables—6 CR and 43 CR. The constables saw them in Piccadilly arm-in-arm, shouting and pushing people off the footway. They refused to desist, and were brought to the station. Prosoner No. 1 (Dr. Gerothwohl) said he and his friend were on their way to the station to give in their cards, when the constables arrested them. The first man (Dr. Gerothwohl) was the spokesman, and gave the card; the other one (Mr. Lavalette) corroborated all he said.

(Clerk.) Dr. Gerothwohl said he was on his way to the station?—Yes, to speak about the other person being arrested, Timmings.

Mr. Lavalette concurred in that?—Yes, he said "Yes" and "No" to whatever the other man said.

Where were they arrested?—I questioned the two constables on that point, and they assured me they had arrested them in Piccadilly; so I took the charge.

Of being drunk and disorderly?—Yes.

What was your opinion as to their condition?—In my opinion they were all drunk, or I should not have taken the charge.

You read the charge over?—Yes, and neither of them denied the charge whatever.

They were taken to the cells?—Yes, they were taken to the cells, and at a quarter to one they asked for a Dr. Stewart, of Redcliffe Gardens, South Kensington.

Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette asked that?—Yes.

Did you send for Dr. Stewart?—A telegram was sent to him through the police of that locality, and a reply was received at a quarter to two to say that he refused to attend. I went and told the first two prisoners (Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette) about the doctor refusing to attend. I told them they could see the divisional surgeon. They said they would, and they were seen by him then.

They accepted him?—Yes.

He came and saw them?—Yes. I think the reply telegram came at a quarter past two.

They were bailed out?—Yes, immediately Dr. Mitchell had seen them, but not by me; it was by another officer, who had taken over the station at that time.

Cross-examined by Mr. G. A. Scott.

Was it at a quarter past twelve these people came in?—Yes, they were brought in at that time.

The three of them?—Yes.

And did Nos. 1 and 2, as you call them, protest?—The names are rather peculiar, that is why I called them Nos. 1 and 2.

Did Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette at once protest against being brought in?—Immediately they were put in the dock, yes.

And protested with considerable warmth?—Yes, very considerable indeed.

Did they say that they had come to the police-station because they thought the third man had been rather roughly handled?—They did not mention those words about the third man, but they said they were coming. The first man said he was coming, and the other said, "Yes, we were."

What for?—To speak about the third. They did not mention him by name; it appeared afterwards they did not know him.

They did at first state that they were voluntarily coming to give evidence about the treatment of the third?—They said they were coming to the station about the third man being arrested.

Did they then say that just as they approached the police-station they were set upon and brought in under arrest?—They did not say that.

Did you ask the constable who brought them in whether that was so?—Yes.

The constable said it was not so?—He said they were arrested in Piccadilly. It is only a short distance away.

Which constable said he arrested them in Piccadilly?—They both said it at the same time—No. 6 and No. 43.

Both No. 6 and No. 43 said that?—Yes.

Did they say anything else about the circumstances under which they arrested them?—Only that they were arm in arm in Piccadilly, shouting and pushing people off the footway, and were drunk.

Did they give you their cards when they made this protest?—The prisoner No. 1 did.

Was it after he made the protest that the charge was read out that they were drunk?—Yes.

Do you say that they were drunk?—I do.

Because they were excited?—Not only that.

For what other reason?—By their wild behaviour, and they smelt of drink.

Do you say they smelt of drink?—Yes.

What makes you say that?—Because I smelt it myself.

Did you examine them to see if they were drunk?—Physically?

Yes. Did you go near, so as to smell their breath?—Yes.

You did not tell us that?—No, I did not, but it is a fact.

When did you do it?—I was standing in the charge-room by the dock, when they were brought in. There was such a commotion I went out to see what it was.

Such a commotion just outside?—Yes.

Do you know that was where these gentlemen were arrested?—I do not.

Would that account for the commotion?—No, it was further away. I heard it in Piccadilly, down the passage opposite.

I thought you said there was such a commotion at the door?—No; outside, I said.

I suggest if the arrest took place there it might account for the commotion?—It may have been part of it. I was inside the station.

When do you say you first smelt the breath of the prisoners?—Immediately they were put in the dock. I was standing there at the time.

Where were you sitting when they were in the dock?—At the desk, about two or three yards away, just against the charge-room.

Do you suggest that sitting at the table you smelt their breath three yards away?—I did not suggest that.

You smelt it before?—I was standing by the dock when they were brought in; that is when I smelt the breath.

Did you smell the breath of all three or only one, or which?—All three of them. I had a good look at them.

Did their breath give indication of beer or spirits, or what?—I could not tell; it was alcoholic liquor of some sort.

Was it spirits?—I could not say; I am not an expert in that line, not to distinguish between the two.

They were charged with being drunk and disorderly, then?—Yes.

Was it because of the smell that you committed them? There was a contradiction; the police said one thing, these gentlemen said the other. Because you thought you smelt their breath did you put them into the cell?—No, on account of the usual cause; after being charged they were placed in the cells.

There was a contradiction, and these gentlemen were offering their cards and saying they were coming to the station for that purpose?—One offered his card, No. 1. I took it and copied the name on the charge sheet.

How long did you remain on duty after they were put in the cell?—Till half-past 2, till they were seen by Dr. Mitchell.

After they had been in the cell they asked you to send for two gentlemen?—No.

Did not they ask that a Dr. Stewart should be asked to come?—They did ask, but not me; a message was sent to me.

A message was sent to you?—Yes.

Asking for you to send for two gentlemen?—No.

Only one gentleman?—Yes, Dr. Stewart.

The messenger only reported a request to send for one person?—Yes.

You did send for Dr. Stewart?—A telegram was sent through the police of that locality.

Did you read the telegram in reply?—Yes, it was recorded in our books at the time.

Have you it here?—No.

Did Dr. Stewart give any excuse for not being able to attend; did he say he was unwell?—We did not get that information, it came through the police at that district; we did not get the message direct.

Was it merely intimated that Dr. Stewart could not attend?—That is so.

What is the next thing that happened?—I went and told them that Dr. Stewart had declined to attend. I said, "You can see our Divisional Surgeon if you like."

Did you suggest your Divisional Surgeon coming?—He was at the station; I suggested they could have him if they liked; I gave them the opportunity.

Were you present when the Divisional Surgeon saw them?—No, not when he actually examined them; I was just going out on patrol.

The Divisional Surgeon is Dr. Mitchell?—Yes.

He is here to-day, I suppose?—Yes.

Were you present when they left after the examination?—I saw them leave.

Were they then drunk?—No.

Perfectly sober?—I would not say perfectly sober, but they were not drunk.

Had they any indication of drink on them when they left?—No, I could not say they had.

Did their breath smell?—I could not say, I did not get close enough to them.

You did not notice any indication of drink when they left?—I did not notice it; I did not get close enough to them; I saw them leave the station, I did not bail them out.

(Magistrate.) The Inspector's duty is not to discharge them on bail until he is satisfied that they are all right.

(Mr. Scott.) What condition of drunkenness do you say these gentlemen were in when they first came in; were they able to walk straight?—Not properly so.

Did they talk thick?—Somewhat.

Did you know they were foreigners?—Yes, I assumed so by the names. The first man said he was an Englishman, and the other said he was a Belgian.

You know the second gentleman's name is Lavalette?—Yes, I put the name on the charge-sheet.

The second letter in his name is "a"?—Yes.

When he was asked to spell his name did he say it was "Lr"?—Not to my knowledge.

That is the way he would pronounce the letter "a." Did he say "Lr"?—I did not notice it.

What did you suggest about their speech being thick?—Merely that it was thick.

Do you mean thick to the extent of not being able to pronounce their words?—Not altogether, partly so.

You say they could not walk straight, their speech was thick, they could not pronounce their words, and their breath smelt. What other symptoms?—No others except their violent behaviour.

Dr. Alexander Mitchell, sworn.

(Witness.) I am a Doctor of Medicine and Divisional Surgeon at Vine Street Police Station. I examined Maurice Gerothwohl at 2.30 on the morning of the 8th instant.

(Clerk.) At Vine Street Police Station?—Yes. I found his pupils abnormally dilated and inactive to the light. The whites of his eyes were congested and his lips looked parched.

(Mr. Scott.) Is this a note you made at the time you are reading from?—Yes. The breath smelt of drink. I should say it was whisky, but in my opinion at the time of my examination he was not drunk, but recovering from the effects of drink. That is all with reference to him. I examined Mr. Lavalette afterwards and found very similar conditions.

(Clerk.) About a quarter of an hour afterwards you examined him, I think?—Yes. I found his condition very similar to the other gentleman's. He was also sober when I examined him, recovering from the effects of drink in my opinion.

Cross-examined by Mr. G. A. Scott.

I want to ask one or two questions about this. Did you ask Dr. Gerothwohl when you first saw him what liquor he had had that evening?—I did not when I first saw him. After my examination was over I smelt his breath and thought that he had been drinking.

Did you ask what amount he had had that evening?—Yes.

Did he tell you one glass of beer at dinner?—He said he had had one beer and one whisky.

Did he tell you he had had one glass of beer at dinner?—I forget whether at dinner, I did not take a note of that at the time.

You do not remember that?—No.

I put it to you what he did say was one glass of German beer at dinner?—I could not swear to that either one way or the other.

And that at about 10.45 he had had one small whisky?—I did not note the time. I do not remember him mentioning the time.

If that was true, would you be prepared to say that your diagnosis of recovering from recent heavy drinking was an inaccurate one?—I did not say heavy; I said excessive. I do not admit that that is true at all.

I do not ask whether you admit it is true. Supposing the learned Magistrate is convinced that it is true, would you be prepared to admit that your diagnosis was not accurate?—I say that having regard to the condition of his pupils, the whites of his eyes and lips, one whisky and one beer would not account for his condition when I examined him.

Then I may take it that if it is true that he had had one glass of beer at dinner and one Scotch whisky about 10.45 or 11, your diagnosis is wrong?—My diagnosis is not wrong; I merely state the condition when I examined him at half-past 2 in the morning.

I think you understand me. I am putting it to you if you are satisfied yourself that that was the amount of liquor consumed, would your diagnosis be wrong?—I did not satisfy myself about it. I merely state my opinion at the time I examined him as to his condition.

I am testing that opinion. I am putting if that was the amount of liquor consumed, I am sure you would be prepared to say in justice that your diagnosis may have been mistaken?—I cannot conceive that one glass of whisky at 10.45 and one glass of beer at 7 or 8 would render one's condition such as his was when I examined him at half-past 2.

You say the two things are inconsistent?—Yes, my own opinion is this, that these men are not men given to drink much at all, and it is possible a little would have affected them.

Do you say that at 2.30 Dr. Gerothwohl's breath smelt strongly of whisky?—Undoubtedly.

Would a glass of whisky at 10.45, this being 2.30 or 2.15, account for that smell?—I do not admit that they had only had one glass of whisky.

I ask if one glass would account for the smell?—I do not think it would.

I agree. Would you also say that their lips were parched?—Both.

Supposing about two hours before they had been thinking themselves very unjustly treated and roughly handled, and had got into a temper, would that account for the lips being parched?—Not two and a half hours afterwards.

Would the one glass of whisky and the one glass of beer account for the lips being parched?—I do not admit that statement. I said that when I examined them at the time I mentioned, at 2.30, the condition was as I have explained to you. I do not know what amount of drink they had taken. The breath smelt of drink, the pupils were dilated, and the lips parched. My opinion was they were recovering from the effects of drinking.

Would the symptoms of dry lips and dilated pupils be consistent with their having had a row and being excited?—No.

Do you really say that?—Not two and a half hours afterwards.

Do you really say that?—Yes, decidedly.

You say it is only consistent with excessive drinking?—Having regard to the breath, to the lips, and to the eyes, the three conditions, you could not get them from any other cause than excessive drinking.

What do you call excessive drinking—seven or eight whiskies?—Anything that makes a man get beyond himself. Some can stand more than others.

A very considerable amount of spirits?—I would not say that. Some people can stand spirits better than others, and can drink much more.

(Magistrate.) I have endeavoured, in a humble way, to do that which no man has as yet done, namely, to define what is being drunk. No one in the world has to inquire into the question so often as I have, and it is quite impossible to define it. Sometimes it is useful to point out for the guidance of counsel, as far as one can, what one thinks is probable. So far as I can, when a person is charged under these circumstances, the test I try to apply is this: if owing either to having had too much at dinner on some festive occasion, or having had some festive day which has perhaps excited him more than usual, and in addition having perhaps had an imprudent amount of drink, or having some exciting cause acting upon him shortly afterwards, something causes him to do that which is disorderly, then I think that the case is proved, if it is something that he would not do in his calm moments. It does not necessarily mean more than that. There is every conceivable stage from one end of the pole to the other end of the pole.

(Mr. Scott.) If I may say so, with great deference, I fully assent to that. In this case I think I shall convince you absolutely.

(Magistrate.) I do not wish to put it in any other way. I merely suggested it to see if I could shorten the case.

(Mr. Scott.) Now I understand what the charge of drunkenness is. Is it suggested these men were downright drunk?

(Magistrate.) I have not heard this case yet. I say there is every imaginable stage. When you come to a question of what a magistrate has to deal with and whether the charge is proved or not, people do not always quite remember how very comparatively small a charge it is.

(Mr. Scott.) Very well.

(Magistrate.) You have not mentioned Timmings.

(Doctor.) I did not see him at all.

(Mr. Scott.) I do not know if there is any other witness.

THOMAS DIVERS, 427C, sworn.

(Witness.) Shortly after 12 on Sunday morning I was on duty in Sackville Street, a turning off Piccadilly. Owing to the shouting coming from Piccadilly I went there, and on my arrival there Police-constable 43 Isaacson handed me over the prisoner Timmings, whom I took to the station. That was in Piccadilly opposite St. James's Church. I went to the station and he was charged.

He was charged with the other two?—Yes.

You heard what happened when they were charged?—Yes.

Cross-examined by Mr. G. A. SCOTT.

Did you walk with Timmings from Piccadilly to Vine Street?—Yes.

(Magistrate.) Did you see anything of the other two?—No.

(Mr. Scott.) Nothing of the other two at all?—No. Timmings was handed over to me as soon as I was in Piccadilly.

Did you all go into the room together, or did you go into Vine Street first?—I went in first with Timmings.

I thought the Inspector said they all came in together?—They followed just on my heels.

Was there an awful row just as you were going to Vine Street?—Apparently from the violence of the prisoners in trying to get away.

The story now is, they were arrested in Piccadilly, and tried to make their escape when they got to Vine Street?—That I do not know, I only say I took Timmings to the station.

Did you hear them say that they had come to Vine Street to give evidence and had been arrested in Vine Street?—I heard them make some remark; what it was I am not certain.

Was the row that you heard caused by their being arrested in Vine Street under protest?—I should not think so.

(Magistrate.) Did Timmings go quietly?—Yes.

He did not give you any trouble, there was no struggling?—Not at all.

Were you there when he was charged?—Yes.

He did not dispute being drunk?—No.

(Mr. Scott.) I do not know, Sir, whether you would allow me to state shortly what I propose to prove before calling my witnesses, or whether I should call my witnesses and address your Worship afterwards. I propose to call Dr. Gerothwohl, Mr. Lavalette, Mr. Sherrington, a barrister, who saw them shortly before, and I propose to call two doctors.

(Magistrate.) In a case like this I think you had better defer your remarks.

(Mr. Scott.) I shall call substantive evidence.

MAURICE GEROTHWOHL, sworn.

Examined by Mr. G. A. SCOTT.

Are you in term time resident at Dublin University?—Yes.

At Trinity College?—Yes.

Are you Professor in French there?—Honours Lecturer in French.

Are you also a Member and Fellow of the Council of the Royal Society of Literature?—I am.

Are you also Chief Examiner in French to the Central Welsh Board of Education?—Yes, re-elected this year.

You have 90 to 100 schools under you?—95, to be accurate.

Are you spending your vacation in London at 8, Alma Terrace, with Mr. Lavalette?—I am.

Did you have somebody to tea on Saturday afternoon?—Yes, I had a friend to tea in the afternoon.

Of the 7th of April?—Yes.

Did you meet Mr. Lavalette about half-past 7?—Yes, just as I was coming out.

You asked him to dine?—I asked him to dine.

Did you dine at the Café Monico?—We dined at the Café Monico.

Have you got the bill here for your dinner?—You have it. There is a cross there against "Beer, 1s."

Did you have beer?—Yes, a glass of Lager beer.

Was that the only liquor you had at dinner?—That was the only liquor we had at dinner.

After dinner did you go to a café in Soho?—We did.

That was a place where they roast coffee freshly?—Yes, Turkish or French.

That is a temperance café?—I have not seen any liquor drunk there; I do not know whether you can get any.

Did you and Mr. Lavalette, when you entered that café, have any liquor there?—No, we had coffee first and a lemonade afterwards.

After that did you go with him and look at the French part of Soho?—On Saturdays the Soho market is on, a most interesting sight.

After coming back did you meet this gentleman, Mr. Sherrington?—Yes.

I do not think you knew Mr. Sherrington, but Mr. Lavalette knew him?—Yes.

(Magistrate.) What time would that be?—About a quarter to 11.

Where?—We met him under the Arcades.

(Mr. Scott.) At the end of Regent Street?—Yes.

I think Mr. Sherrington was returning to his club, having dined at the Trocadero. Did you, Mr. Lavalette and Mr. Sherrington, go together to the Trocadero?—Yes.

Do you remember about how long you were talking with Mr. Sherrington?—We talked about 10 minutes, under the Arcades, before proceeding to the Trocadero. We must have remained at least half an hour at the Trocadero.

At the Trocadero did you have some drinks?—Mr. Lavalette had a whisky and plain water, I had a whisky and soda, so had Mr. Sherrington.

At that time did you discuss many subjects with Mr. Sherrington?—Yes, Mr. Sherrington asked a lot of questions about Trinity College, as a Trinity man was residing with him. We came to the question of compulsory Greek. I told him I owed my appointment at Trinity to the abolition of Greek.

(Magistrate.) Have we to go into that?

(Mr. Scott.) I think it is a strong indication as to whether there is any probability in this.

Were those the class of subjects?—Yes. I may add that Mr. Lavalette discussed the question of a commercial university.

What time did Mr. Sherrington leave?—About half past 11

Then did you walk with Mr. Lavalette towards Piccadilly?—Yes.

You walked down Piccadilly till you got to the St. James's Church?—Yes.

I do not want to lead you here. Tell the learned Magistrate what you saw when you got just about opposite St. James's Church?—We were walking towards St. James's Church.

(Magistrate.) Had Mr. Sherrington left at that time?

(Mr. Scott.) Mr. Sherrington took an omnibus about half past 11.

Just a little after 12 o'clock, walking down Piccadilly through the crowd, you found yourselves at St. James's Church. Was there a considerable amount of rowdyism going on outside St. James's Church?—Yes, a great deal; there was one special gang of young men; I do not know if they were undergraduates. There was a very great row. They formed a sort of circle and several policemen came forward and pushed them on.

Were they arm-in-arm?—Yes, several of them.

Were you arm-in-arm with Mr. Lavalette or anybody else?—I was not arm-in-arm; I was walking by the side of Mr. Lavalette.

Was it then for the first time that you saw Timmings?—He was walking just in front of us, behind this group of rowdy young men. He was walking quite quietly when several policemen charged the rowdy young men. I saw a police-constable, No. 43, push Timmings forward, then shove him this way towards the pavement. There was a hansom cab standing there and Timmings fell against the wheel.

There was a considerable amount of rowdyism going on, and the police were keeping order?—Yes, they were under great provocation.

The result was you saw Timmings arrested?—Yes.

After seeing that, did you and Mr. Lavalette follow?—I said to Mr. Lavalette: "This seems very unjust, I am going to give my card; come along." I said that in French. We then followed Constable 43, who was taking Timmings towards Swallow Street. We saw him just at the corner of Piccadilly and Swallow Street with a constable, probably the constable who gave evidence to-day.

Swallow Street is the street that leads from Piccadilly to Vine Street?—Yes.

Did you follow with Mr. Lavalette down to Vine Street?—Yes, with the intention of giving our cards to the Inspector.

What happened when you approached near Vine Street Station as far as you are concerned?—Just before reaching the door of Vine Street Station I noticed two constables standing just outside, one on each side of the station. I saw the police-constables with Mr. Timmings going in and we followed a few paces behind. Just as I was putting my foot on the first step at the police station I was seized from behiud and shoved forward, when I was caught by Police-constable No. 43, who twisted me round. I felt absolutely dazed, but still have some vague recollection of being pushed by No. 43 on to another constable, then back to No. 43, then into the dock. Mr. Lavalette following.

Did that make a considerable commotion?—It might have, I presume.

It was quite consistent with it making a commotion?—Yes.

Then did you find yourself before the Inspector?—I was in the dock, yes, and Mr. Lavalette followed.

Had Timmings got in just before you?—Yes, he must have been the first in.

When you were there did you explain to the Inspector who you were?—I attempted to. I was extremely excited in fact, not to say furious. I must have been quivering with indignation.

Did you try to get the Inspector to take your card?—Yes, the constable who arrested rather pooh-poohed the idea, but still the card was eventually given.

After you had given that explanation did you find you were being charged with being drunk and disorderly?—Yes, I remember that we were. Immediately on the bar of the dock being raised I walked up to the Inspector and asked him just in front of the desk: "Now, do you really think me drunk?" To which he replied, "Yes."

He has told us how your breath smelt?—I did ask him that, which was my protest against the charge.

Had you a stick?—I had a stick. About the time I was protesting I was holding my stick like this (describing), clutching rather nervously, no doubt, the iron bar of the dock. I was not paying much attention to the stick, which I saw a minute afterwards. Police-constable 43, not Police-constable 6, who had dragged it away, broke it deliberately across his knee.

Is this the stick broken in that way (producing same)?—Yes, it is broken pretty neatly, as you see, for a stick of rather a fibrous nature.

Are you perfectly certain it was No. 43?—Yes.

After that you were put in the cells?—After that we were put in the cells. I beg to say that, contrary to what occurred in the station at first, the gaoler was extremely courteous. I asked at that moment to send some messages and for some notepaper, which a young constable—I cannot recollect his face—promised to bring, but eventually it was never brought.

Ultimately did you ask for a message to be sent to Dr. Stewart?—Ultimately I asked for a message to be sent to Dr. Stewart and to another friend—Mr. Charles Graves—who is here present to-day in court.

He is the literary editor of the "Spectator"?—Yes. Afterwards, when we were let out, I was told by the Inspector or gaoler—I asked whether Mr. Graves had been sent for, and they said no, although I laid great insistence on his being sent for for private reasons.

Dr. Stewart was sent for, and you were informed he sent a telegram saying he could not attend?—Yes, he has given me a little note to state the reason.

After that the Inspector tells us that he asked you if you would like to have Divisional Surgeon?—The Police Surgeon, Dr. Mitchell.

Were you examined first by Dr. Mitchell?—I was examined first by Dr. Mitchell, and I remember very well asking him: "Now, you cannot say I look very drunk," and adding at the same time: "Of course, I am very nervous; a thing like this does make one feel very nervous and excitable."

He did examine you?—He did examine me.

Did he examine your breath?—I cannot say I noticed that.

Is it the fact that you were in any way under the influence of liquor on that occasion?—Not by any means.

Is it the fact that you committed any act of rowdyism when in Piccadilly?—Not by any means.

I think I have seven gentlemen, all in eminent positions, who have come to speak as to your character and the likelihood of this happening?—Will your Worship allow me to add a few words? Dr. Mitchell stated my mouth was very parched and my eyes were congested. I am a person of nervous temperament, and if Dr. Mitchell were to examine me now, although it is morning, and I have not had a glass of wine or anything for 15 hours or so, he would find my mouth is still parched.

I did not ask you if the glass of beer and the small whisky were all the liquor you had had?—Yes, it was.

HENRY LAVALETTE, sworn.

Examined by Mr. G. A. SCOTT.

Do you reside at 8, Alma Terrace?—Yes.

Was Dr. Gerothwohl staying with you?—Yes, he was on his holidays.

He is at Trinity College, Dublin?—Yes.

I think you are a journalist?—Yes.

And also have employment with the Neuchatel Asphalte Company?—Yes.

Of whom Mr. Thomas Bolton is the chairman, a member of Parliament?—Yes.

I think he is here to-day to speak as to your character?—Yes.

Did you go out with Dr. Gerothwohl to dinner on that evening?—I did.

Did you dine at the Café Monico?—Yes.

What did you have to drink at dinner?—I had one glass of dark lager beer.

Is that the bill so far as you can see? (Handing same.) Dr. Gerothwohl was your host; you were the guest of Dr. Gerothwohl?—Yes.

After that did you go to a café in Soho?—Yes, in Dean Street, where Dr. Gerothwohl said the coffee was very good, where we had coffee which was indeed very good. After coffee we had a glass of lemonade each, and I drank half of that glass of lemonade.

Did you wander about the French quarter in Soho?—Yes.

And listened to a lecturer?—We listened to a temperance lecturer for three-quarters of an hour; then we listened to the shop people selling their goods, and I remember even one of the butchers wanting me to buy a leg of mutton, which of course I refused.

After that did you later on in the evening meet Mr. Sherrington? We do not want to take it at too great length?—After that we met Mr. Sherrington, under the Arcade opposite Swan and Edgar's.

You knew Mr. Sherrington; you had met him in country houses?—Yes.

Did you introduce him to Dr. Gerothwohl?—Yes.

Did you go to the Trocadero?—Yes.

You were together some three-quarters of an hour altogether?—Yes, about.

Then did you have a glass of whisky yourself?—Yes, whisky and water.

Did you discuss various things with Mr. Sherrington, and say good night to him at about half-past 11?—Yes.

Then did you and Dr. Gerothwohl make your way down Piccadilly towards Kensington, where you live?—Yes.

I think you were going to take an omnibus?—Yes.

Opposite St. James's Church, in Piccadilly, was there a scene of considerable rowdyism?—There was a great scene, much shouting. We saw a few arrested; in fact, there was a little knot of people in front of St. James's Church. There we saw Timmings walking towards the railings of the church, and we saw Constable C.R. 43 pushing him.

You are not throwing any blame on the constable; there was consierable rowdyism going on?—Yes. We thought he had been rather unjustly treated.

Did not he ultimately slip near a hansom?—Yes; the constable pushed him like this (describing), and he fell against the wheel of the cab. Then Dr. Gerothwohl said that was rather unjust, and he said he was going to stand as a witness for Mr. Timmings, and I accompanied him.

You did not know his name was Timmings then?—No, of course not. We saw C.R. 43 take Timmings in charge across the street, the left-hand corner of Swallow Street, where Benoist's, the provision shop, is, and we saw him joined by another constable.

Did you and Dr. Gerothwohl follow along to Vine Street?—They were on the left-hand side of the street, we were on the right. They crossed the street, so that we joined actually in the middle of Swallow Street. I was looking at C.R. 43's number; we walked along towards the station. We may have fallen back a little. At the time that we entered the police station I was abreast of the three. I do not know what had happened to Dr. Gerothwohl at all. Whilst stooping over to look at C.R. 43 I noticed a constable walking behind us; I think it is 6 C.R. When we were at the door of the police station I was violently seized by the policeman who had been following us. I was thrown against another, then another, then another, and finally I found myself in the dock. Mr. Timmings and Dr. Gerothwohl were there. We protested, and Dr. Gerothwohl wanted to send in his card. The police did not take it. If I may use the expression Dr. Gerothwohl used, the idea was rather pooh-poohed more or less. I also sent in my card.

Did they ask you to spell your name?—Yes.

Did you pronounce the "a" as though it sounded like "r"?—Yes.

Which is the pronunciation that you are accustomed to?—Yes.

Were you corrected by C.R. 43, who spelt it for you?—Not at that time; that happened later.

You went into the cells. We have heard that Dr. Gerothwohl asked for two gentlemen?—I quite agree with what he said with regard to that.

Were you ultimately examined?—Yes, by Dr. Mitchell, after Dr. Gerothwohl. Dr. Mitchell asked me why I had not denied the charge. I said "I do not know why I have not denied it; I am a foreigner, and I do not know what you must say and what you must not say in a police court."

You did not mean to admit that you were drunk?—Not in the least.

Was that all the liqour you had had that evening?—It was.

One glass of beer and one whisky?—That is so.

Had it had the slightest effect on you?—Not the slightest.

Did you commit any act of rowdyism yourself?—Not the least.

I forgot to ask Dr. Gerothwohl this. After being bailed out did you go straight to Dr. Davis?—After leaving the station about half-past 2 in the morning.

Dr. Davis, of 3, Drayton Terrace, South Kensington?—Yes.

Did he carefully examine you and apply every test?—Yes.

After that did you go to Dr. Walker?—Yes.

And did he do the same?—He also made an examination.

Dr. Davis and Dr. Walker are both here?—Yes. I may lay emphasis on the fact that I passed my card too at the police-station.

WILLIAM S. SHERRINGTON, sworn.

Examined by Mr. G. A. SCOTT.

You are a barrister practising at 10, New Court, Lincoln's Inn?—Yes.

I think you have met Mr. Lavalette at country houses and various places on previous occasions?—Yes, I was staying with him last autumn for three or four days in a country house, and I met him at dinner, I think, on three or four occasions before.

Did you meet him and Dr. Gerothwohl at the end of Regent Street on that Saturday evening?—Yes.

Do you remember about what time?—I can fix it, because I had dined myself at the Trocadero about 8 o'clock. I had got a brief bag with papers in and a coat, which I left in the cloakroom there. Then after dinner, somewhere about 10, I went down to my club in Pall Mall.

Was it on the way back from the club that you met them?—I left the club to come back, I should say, about 20 minutes to 11. I should say it was about a quarter to 11 that I met them just at the corner of Regent Street.

Did you stop and chat with them for about 10 minutes to a quarter of an hour in Regent Street?—Yes.

Then did you go on to the Trocadero?—Yes. Mr. Lavalette stopped me and said we had not met since last autumn, and then he introduced me to his friend, whom I had never seen before.

Did you go on together to the Trocadero?—Yes, we remained talking for some time. I found the professor was rather an interesting man, and we discussed mostly the University. We discussed various things about Trinity College. I asked him whether he knew anyone at Cambridge. He happened to know the head of my college. Then I told him I had not been up there since I went up to vote on compulsory Greek. Then we got discussing that. He said that he owed his appointment at Dublin, he believed, to the fact that they had abolished compulsory Greek there, but although that was so, he was in favour of compulsory Greek. I told him I was very glad to hear it. Then I asked whether "Kottabos" was still published at Dublin. I quoted to him an instance of what I thought was a very good story that appeared in it of the Irish landlord who stood on his estate and quoted Virgil's line, O fortunatos nimium sua si bona norint! and from the hills came back the echo "No rint." Having done this I said I must be off; I had to get my bag from the Trocadero. We went across there. I think Mr. Lavalette said, "Shall we have a whisky together?" or something of that sort. I said yes, and we went in. There we stood. We had one whisky each. Mr. Lavalette paid for one whisky each, and we stood talking a good deal longer. We were again discussing the University question.

Then you left about half-past 11?—Yes.

Having regard to their demeanour and conversation, can you express any opinion as to whether they were under the effects of alcohol?—I am quite positive they were not under the effects of alcohol then. There is not a shadow of doubt about it to my mind. They did not appear to me to be people who were out for an hilarious evening at all. The subjects we discussed were entirely of a different nature, and I certainly consider there is not a shadow of doubt about it.

Was there any possible trace of alcohol about them?—Not at all. I had never seen Dr. Gerothwohl before.

Or any suggestion of rowdyism?—Not the least.

You bade them good-night at half-past 11?—Yes.

Three-quarters of an hour after that this incident took place?—I left them and went to the cloak room to get my things. That is the last I saw of them.

(Magistrate.) You saw nothing of this occurrence at all?—No, I saw nothing.

(Magistrate.) I do not think I need put you to the necessity of calling further evidence. This is one of the cases which illustrates a good many things, amongst other things the very great difficulty that the police have in this neighbourhood, especially on occasions such as that as everybody knows which occurred last Saturday. There are thousands and thousands of people all bent on amusing themselves, and they throw an intolerable amount of work on the shoulders of the police. I have listened very carefully to the evidence given by the two defendants, Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette, and a friend who has been here, who is not likely to mislead me in a matter of this sort. I feel I must accept their statements, and I am glad to do so. They had not had any amount of drink which would cause them to be in a state of intoxication without some more exciting cause than is accounted for. I must remember what the circumstances were on this special night, with all these great disorders occurring. They chose that occasion for amusing themselves by perambulating this thickly crowded and noisy neighbourhood on the last night of the week. I think that two educated Englishmen in the same position as themselves would have been specially careful, if they remembered the particular night it was, to keep out of such rowdy scenes which unfortunately, as they conceded, occurred on that occasion. They themselves have stated there was a great scene of riot, and that the police were under great provocation. It seems to me they would have been wiser, therefore, to have kept entirely aloof from that, or, at any rate, to have left the police entirely to manage their own affairs; but they seem to have taken upon themselves to more or less interfere by following up one of these cases in which a constable was obliged to arrest a person for disorderly conduct, when they themselves had seen only a portion of what had occurred. They identified themselves more or less with the person who was being charged. That person has not disputed the fact that he was drunk in any way, nor did he at the time. He does not dispute that he was behaving in a drunken and disorderly manner. It was by identifying themselves in that manner with him and the scenes that were taking place that got them into the trouble in which they are. I have said already if they had been wise they would have kept out of it altogether. In that sense they have only themselves to thank for having got mixed up with it. They have behaved so handsomely in stating the difficulties under which, in their opinion, the police were placed, that I am only too glad to be able to accept their account of the matter so far as that goes. It certainly strikes me as most agreeable that, though in difficulties themselves, they have paid a tribute really to the behaviour of the police in the matter. It is unfortunate that they should in any way have got mixed up in this matter. I feel bound now to discharge them. Timmings will be fined 10s. or seven days.

DR. GEROTHWOHL'S WRITTEN REQUEST FOR INTERVIEW WITH COMMISSIONER.

Address: 8 Alma Terrace, Kensington, W.
11th April, 1906.

Mr. M. A. Gerothwohl presents his compliments to the Chief Commissioner, and requests of him the favour of an interview in connection with the Boat Race night case, dismissed this morning at Marlborough Police Court. With anticipated thanks. To-morrow afternoon or Friday would suit Mr. Gerothwohl perfectly.

HOME OFFICE CORRESPONDENCE

Relating to the case of Dr. Gerothwohl and Mr. Lavalette.

(1) Letter from Dr. Gerothwohl to the Home Office of 12th April, 1906.

8, Alma Terrace, Kensington, W.,
12th April, 1906.

To the Right Honourable the Home Secretary.

Sir,—I beg respectfully to submit that an inquiry be instituted into the conduct of the police at Vine Street Station in connection with the charge of "drunkenness and disorder" brought by them against myself and a friend, Mr. Henri Lavalette, on Saturday night (April 7th), a charge dismissed by Mr. Denman at Marlborough Street Police Court on Wednesday, April 11th.

My main reasons for demanding such an inquiry are the following:—

(I.) By virtue of the magistrate's acceptance of the defendants' story, which suggested that they (the defendants) had been arrested at the station door when on their way to tender their cards as witnesses on behalf of a third person, at that time unknown to them, I contend that Police-constables 43 C.R. and 6 C.R., who, on Monday, 9th, at the aforesaid police court, swore specifically, and with abundance of detail, to arresting us (the defendants) in Piccadilly, cannot escape the twofold charge of perjury and conspiracy, and, having previously been dismissed the Police Force as a public danger, should be prosecuted on public as well as private grounds.

(II.) The evidence given by the defendants, and accepted by the magistrate, reveals brutal methods of treatment and procedure by the constables, indicating a grave state of affairs at the Vine Street Station, and denoting culpable negligence, not to say encouragement on the part of the Inspector.

Confident that you cannot fail to appreciate my reasons for suggesting that an inquiry be held, I shall be interested to learn whether it would facilitate the task of the Home Office in this connection if the matter be made the subject of queries in Parliament by Members on both sides of the House, or if the Home Office authorities would prefer to take immediate and independent action, in which case my friend, Mr. Henri Lavalette, and myself would be glad of an interview at the Home Office.

Meanwhile, and thanking you in anticipation for your careful consideration of this matter,

I beg to remain, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sd.) Maurice A. Gerothwohl, D. Litt.
(Fellow and Member of Council of the Royal Society of Literature, Honours Lecturer at Trinity College, Dublin, etc.).

P.S.—I append extracts from the "Daily Chronicle," "Daily Telegraph," and a "leader" from to-day's "Daily News."

(2) Letter from Dr. Gerothwohl to Mr. Chalmers, 14th April, 1906.

8, Alma Terrace,
Kensington, W.
14th April, 1906.

Dear Sir,—I have this very day lodged with the Home Secretary a strong request that an inquiry be instituted into the conduct of the Vine Street Police in connection with the Boat Race night case. For that purpose I called to see you at the office yesterday, but found you were away on leave.

Feeling compelled to lodge the request without fail, I did so. I feel confident that the Home Office will see its way to initiate in the matter, but failing this, we should get the question raised in Parliament and prosecute ourselves in the public interest. For, in face of the declarations made with such abundance of detail by Constables C.R. 43 and C.R. 6, and of our complete acquittal by Mr. Denman, the course of prosecution for conspiracy and perjury is legally clear. The "Daily News," under the heading, "The Police and the Public," strongly urges the Government to take up the matter; while the brutal methods of the police station, as revealed by our evidence, call for urgent and stringent reform.

Perhaps you would very kindly consider the exceptional circumstances in which we are placed, and although "on leave" for the present, arrange with the Home Secretary for an interview with us?

Thanking you in anticipation,

I am,
Yours very truly,
(Sd.) M. A. Gerothwohl, D. Litt.

(3) Letter from Mr. Gerothwohl to Mr. Gladstone, 22nd April, 1906.

8, Alma Terrace,
Kensington, W.
22nd April, 1906.

To the Right Honourable H. J. Gladstone,
Home Secretary.

Sir,—I venture to ask for your personal and most careful consideration of the demand lodged by me with the Home Office for a searching investigation of the conduct of the Vine Street Police in connection with the case to which reference is made in the appended "cuttings" from the "Speaker" and "Daily News." I make this direct appeal respectfully, but firmly, not only because I regard a public reparation for the public outrage we have suffered as our due, both materially and morally, but also in the interest of the public issues involved. For I feel convinced that you, Sir, after perusing the full evidence of the case, will agree with the Liberal Press, in particular, that the acts of perjury and brutality committed by certain members of the Metropolitan Police Force constitute a grave public scandal and danger, calling for stern and immediate repression. I might add that it behoves more especially a Liberal Administration to initiate reforms in connection with abuses of this kind.

I understand that friends on both sides of the House propose raising the question in Parliament, but even in the absence of such support I feel confident that you would not resent this intrusion, and give your most earnest attention to the details of the case.

Trusting to hear favourably from you,

I am, Sir,
Yours truly,
(Sd.) Maurice A. Gerothwohl, D. Litt.

(4) Letter from Dr. Gerothwohl to the Home Office, of 24th April, 1906.

8, Alma Terrace,
Kensington, W.
24th April, 1906.

To the Under Secretary of State,
Home Office.

Sir,—Referring to my previous letter of the 12th instant, I should feel much indebted if an interview could be arranged at an early date between the Home Office authorities, on the one side, and Mr. Lavalette, myself, and our legal adviser on the other, to enable us to state our grievances in detail and discuss the case

Thanking you in anticipation,

I remain, Sir,
Yours very faithfully,
(Sd.) Maurice A. Gerothwohl, D. Litt.

P.S.—I would suggest that the Home Office authorities see that the full evidence of the trial be laid before them.

(Intd.) M. A. G.

(5) Report of the Commissioner of Police to the Home Office, 25th April, 1906.

New Scotland Yard, S.W.,
25th April, 1906.

Sir,—Referring to the correspondence No. 139,785/1.2. herewith returned, on the subject of the arrest of Messrs. Gerothwohl and Lavalette for drunkenness and disorderly conduct in Piccadilly on the early morning of the 8th instant, I have the honour to transmit, for the information of the Secretary of State, the enclosed reports, etc., which I had called for prior to the receipt of the Home Office correspondence.

These reports are perfectly straightforward, bear every indication of credibility, and appear to me to correctly represent the facts as they took place.

With regard to the dismissal of the charge against these gentlemen, I would point out that both were legally represented, whereas the police officers had no legal assistance. The consequence was that the evidence for the defence was not properly tested by cross-examination. Had this been done a different complexion might have been placed upon the case; or, in any event, the Magistrate would not have laboured under the disadvantage of having to adjudicate upon evidence placed before him on so one-sided a manner.

The account which appeared in the "Evening Standard" gives almost a verbatim report of the Magistrate's summing up; and from this it will be seen that he did not give a "complete acquittal" as contended by Mr. Gerothwohl in his letter of the 14th inst. On the contrary, his decision appears to have been primarily based on the negative ground that it had not been shown that defendants had had sufficient liquor to cause intoxication, although they had not satisfactorily accounted for themselves during the interval of time between 11.30 when they left the Trocadero to 12.10 when they were arrested at St. James's Church, 250 yards away.

In cases of turmoil such as occur in the West End on Boat Race night the police obviously are not in a position to collect evidence as to the amount of liquor which defendants may have consumed; but it will be seen from the medical certificates, given as a result of examination made two and a quarter hours after the arrest, that both defendants were "recovering from the effects of excessive drinking."

It will be noted that according to the police account, upon arresting Timmings, Police-constable Isaacson then and there made him over to Police-constable Divers, who had come up on hearing the tumult, thus setting free Isaacson, who then and there arrested Mr. Lavalette, while Mr. Gerothwohl was arrested by Police-constable Wallington; and that no other arrests as alleged by defendants were made at the time. Further, Police-constable Wallington asserts that he, and not Police-constable Isaacson, broke Mr. Gerothwohl's stick under circumstances he describes, and in this he is corroborated by several witnesses.

It is clear that these defendants did not ask to have their doctor sent for until they had been in custody for an hour—that they did not account for themselves during the interval of time between 11.30 when they left the Trocadero and their arrest at St. James' Church at 12.10, or according to their account outside Vine Street,—either place being not more than from 200 to 300 yards from the Trocadero. Lastly it may be pointed out that the man who according to them had been improperly arrested pleaded guilty at Court to the charge on which the police apprehended him.

I regret that I am unable to carry this case any further. If the complainants are not satisfied with the dismissal of the charge brought against them, and desire further judicial inquiry, I can only suggest that they make the necessary application to the Magistrate who dealt with the case.

I may add that the subject of the police being legally represented in contested cases of this nature is receiving my consideration.

I am Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
(Sd.) E. R. Henry.

(6). Letter from the Home Office to Dr. Gerothwohl, 28th April, 1906.

Whitehall,
28th April, 1906.

Sir,

I am directed by the Secretary of State to say that he has caused careful inquiry to be made in the matter of your letters of the 12th and 22nd inst. with regard to the conduct of certain Metropolitan Police officers on the night of the 7th-8th inst., and, while he fully accepts the decision of the Magistrate dismissing the charge of drunkenness, and is glad to believe that the police officers who were maintaining order in Piccadilly in circumstances of great difficulty were mistaken in this point, he finds himself unable to take action of the kind suggested in your letter. If the grave charges you make against the officers in question are to be carried further, the only way in which this can properly be done is by proceedings in a Court of Law. It is open to you to institute such proceedings if you are so advised, and the Secretary of State can assure you that no obstacle will be placed in your way by the police authorities; but he cannot accede to your suggestion that the materials placed before him are sufficient to justify him in taking further action.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

Copies of Original Reports dated 13th April, 1906, of P.C.'s Isaacson, Wallington and Divers, Inspector Berry, Sub-Divisional Inspector McKay, and also Minutes of Superintendent Mann of the "C" Division thereon.

Vine Street, "C."
April 13th, 1906.

With reference to a report called for re arrest of three men, named Timmins and Gerothwohl and Lavalette, for being drunk and disorderly at Piccadilly at 12.10 a.m. the 8th inst., I beg to report that I was on duty in company with P.C. 6 C.R. Wallington at Piccadilly, near St. James's Church, on the above date when I saw a large crowd proceeding westwards on the south side of Piccadilly shouting and making a great noise. We attempted to disperse the crowd, but failed. Three men mentioned, with others, were drunk, walking arm in arm, causing foot passengers to walk in the roadway. I then arrested Timmins and handed him to P.C. 427 Divers, who appeared on the scene. I then arrested Lavalette and P.C. Wallington arrested Gerothwohl and conveyed them to Vine Street Police Station. They were all placed in the dock. Gerothwohl, when asked by P.C. Wallington for his walking-stick refused to give it up and raised it as if to strike the P.C., who at once seized it, and in the struggle to get it from him it was broken. When the charge of being drunk and disorderly was read over to them they made no reply. They appeared at Marlborough Street Police Court at 10 a.m. 9th inst., before G. L. Denman, Esq., who, after hearing police evidence, remanded them till 12 noon Wednesday, 11th inst., for the attendance of Inspector Berry, who took the charge, and Doctor Mitchell, the Divisional Surgeon. The Magistrate, after hearing the evidence of the Inspector and Doctor and the prisoners Gerothwohl and Lavalette, discharged the two prisoners and fined the third man, Timmins, who did not deny the charge, 10s. or 7 days. The Magistrate in his remarks stated that Gerothwohl and Lavalette had only themselves to blame for associating with a disorderly crowd at that hour of the night, and that the Police were worthy of credit in the way they carried out their duties on these occasions. I still have no doubt that all the prisoners were drunk at the time they were charged.

With reference to report called for re arrest of three men, named Timmins, Gerothwohl, and Lavalette, at Piccadilly on the 8th inst., I beg to report that at 12.10 a.m. 8th inst. I was on duty at Piccadilly with P.C. 43 C.R. Isaacson, assisting to disperse a crowd which was going West. When near St. James's Church, P.C. Isaacson had cause to arrest Timmins, who was walking arm in arm with Gerothwohl and Lavalette and others shouting and making a great noise. Timmins was handed over to P.C. 427 Divers, who had then come up. I then arrested Gerothwohl and P.C. Isaacson arrested Lavalette and conveyed them to Vine Street Station. They were all placed in the dock. I asked Gerothwohl for his stick. He refused to give it up, at the same time holding it in a striking attitude. I took hold of it, and in the struggle to get it away it was broken. They were then charged with being drunk and disorderly by P.C. Isaacson. Upon the charge being read over to them by Inspector Berry they made no reply. They appeared at Marlborough Street Police Court at 10 a.m. the 9th instant before G. L. Denman, Esq., who, after hearing the police evidence, remanded them till 12 noon, Wednesday, the 11th inst., for the attendance of Divisional Surgeon and the Inspector who took the charge.

With reference to report called for re the arrest of three men, viz., "Timmins," Gerothwohl, and "Lavalette," at Piccadilly on 8th instant, I beg to report that at 12.5 a.m., 8th inst., I was on duty at Sackville Street when I heard shouting going on at Piccadilly, near St. James's Church. On my arrival there P.C. 43 Cr. Isaacson handed the prisoner "Timmins" over to me, whom I took to Vine Street Station. A few moments later P.C. Isaacson and P.C. 6 C.R. Wallington brought in the other two prisoners "Gerothwohl" and "Lavalette." They were all placed in the dock. P.C. 6 C.R. Wallington then asked "Gerothwohl" for his stick, which he refused to give up, and held it in a threatening manner. The P.C. seized it, and in the struggle to get possession of it, it was broken. They were then charged by P.C. 43 C.R. Isaacson as being drunk and disorderly. On the charge being read out to them by Inspector Berry they made no reply.

Vine Street, "C"
April 13th, 1906.

With reference to attached, I beg to report that at 12.15 a.m., 8th inst., I was in charge of this station when Morris Gerothwohl, age 29, a Professor, of 8, Alma Terrace, Kensington, Henry Lavalette, age 25, a Journalist, of same address, and Charles Timmings, age 19, a groom, of 6, Bakers Street, Fulham, were brought to Station by P.C.'s 6 C.R. Wallington, 43 C.R. Isaacson, and 427 Divers, on a charge of being drunk and disorderly at Piccadilly. The two former P.C.'s stated they saw all three prisoners, arm in arm, drunk, shouting and pushing people off the footway, which was very crowded at that time owing to its being Boat Race night. In the dock Gerothwohl stated that he and Lavalette were coming to the station to hand in their cards on behalf of Timmings and were arrested when on way here. I closely questioned the two former P.C.'s in this point, but they assured me that all three prisoners were arrested at Piccadilly at the time the offence was committed, Timmins first, and handed over to P.C. 427 Divers, and the others immediately afterwards. P.C. Divers corroborated that part of the statement referring to him, but stated that he did not see anything of the offence with which they were charged as he did not arrive on the scene till just as Timmings was arrested. As in my opinion they were all drunk I did not place any credence in the allegation made by the two former prisoners respecting their arrest, and they were all charged accordingly. Gerothwohl and Lavalette were both very violent in the station, the former, who is a tall powerful man, particularly so. He had a walking stick in his hand, which he was flourishing in a very dangerous manner. He was requested by P.C. 6 C.R. to give it up, and I also endeavoured to persuade him to give it to me, but he declined to do so. As it was a source of danger to all concerned for a man in his condition to remain in possession of it, it was taken from him by force, but no more than was necessary. In the struggle the stick, which was a somewhat flimsy one, became broken in two. The statement made by Gerothwohl before the Magistrate that the stick was taken from him by P.C. 43 C.R., who broke it across his knee, is an absolute falsehood. I was in the Charge Room when all three prisoners were brought in and saw all that occurred. They made no reply whatever when I read the charge to them, did not deny being drunk or ask to see a doctor. At 12.45 a.m. Gerothwohl and Lavalette requested that Dr. Stewart, 98, Redcliffe

Gardens, South Kensington, should be sent to to come and examine them. A telephone message was sent to him through Police of Chelsea and a reply received at 2.25 a.m. 8th instant to say that he declined to attend. Copies of messages attached. I informed them of this and told them they could be examined by the Divisional surgeon, Dr. Mitchell, and they at once decided to do so. They were examined at 2.20 a.m. by Dr. Mitchell, who certified them to be recovering from the effects of excessive drinking, but were not then drunk. They were then bailed out on their own recognisances. I attended Police Court on the 11th instant and gave evidence of the facts above mentioned. The attached cuttings from the "Daily Telegraph" give a fuller account of the evidence given at the Police Court, and the one from the "Evening Standard" is practically verbatim report of the Magistrate's remarks. I respectfully beg to draw attention to the fact that although evidence was given as to the movements of Gerothwohl and Lavalette up to 11.30 p.m. 7th, when it was stated they left the Trocadero after drinking whisky there with one of the witnesses for the defence, no account was given of their movements during the time that elapsed till they were arrested at 12.15 a.m. 8th instant.

I beg to suggest that taking this in conjunction with the fact that the spot where they were arrested is only about 50 yards from the Trocadero, it is not unreasonable to impute that they had other drink in the meantime, and subsequently formed part of the disorderly crowd that was passing along the street when they were arrested. Reports from P.C.'s herewith

Submitted. It is very clear that that Messrs. Gerothwohl and Lavalette had not a very clear recollection of what took place on the morning of their arrest. If P.C.'s Wallington and Isaacson had not arrested the gentlemen outside St. James's Church there would not have been any necessity to hand Timmings over to P.C. Divers. Again, Mr. Gerothwohl swore that his walking stick was taken from him by P.C. 43 C.R. Isaacson, who broke it across his knee. The stick was taken away by P.C. Wallington, who admits that it was broken in the struggle. Had not Messrs. Gerothwohl and Lavalette been under the influence of drink they would not have been interfered with, and, as the learned Magistrate remarked, they had only themselves to blame for what took place. The officers concerned are thoroughly reliable, and I respectfully submit that their version of the occurrence is the correct one.

Submitted.—That Gerothwohl and Lavalette were not arrested when on way to Station to give in their cards as witnesses is quite clear, for had that been the case, there was no necessity for P.C. Isaacson to have handed over his prisoner Timmings for the purpose of arresting, with P.C. Wallington, the two former if they were going to the station in a quiet and orderly manner.

The constables would not have it that Messrs. Gerothwohl and Lavalette were interesting themselves in the case under such circumstandes set forth by these gentlemen. Both constables are positive that the three (Gerothwohl, Lavalette and Timmings) were all walking together, arm in arm, at the time they interfered with them, and that they made no mistake in arresting the wrong persons.

They are most reliable and trustworthy constables, and not likely to act rashly or too hastily, or in any way interfere without a good cause. The constables, when making the arrests, honestly believed from the men's behaviour that they were drunk, and this was the honest opinion that the Inspector also formed. Had the charge of drunkenness been denied at the time, the Divisional Surgeon, who was in the station at the time, would have been called to decide the question, but there was, the Inspector assures me, no such denial.

The assertion that the constable deliberately broke Mr. Gerothwohl's stick across his knee is a falsehood, the manner in which it was broken is fully shown in Inspector Berry's report.

That there was good cause for the officers concluding Messrs. Gerothwohl and Lavalette were drunk is fully borne out from the result of Divisional Surgeon's examination two hours and fifteen minutes after the charge had been taken, when he certified that "they were then recovering from the effects of excessive drinking." He also swore upon cross-examination at Police Court, that such a small quantity of drink they admitted having had would not account for their condition, even in conjunction with excitement.

If there was conduct in the public thoroughfare on the part of those charged as stated by the constables, whose word I see no reason to doubt, all were very properly arrested.

No complaint has been made by either of the three persons named, and Messrs. Gerothwohl and Lavalette have only themselves to blame, as the learned Magistrate remarked, for what befell them.

The extracts from "Daily Telegragh" and "Evening Standard" newspapers herewith give a much better account of Police Court proceedings than does the "Daily News."

Minutes of Inquiry held by Major Wodehouse, Assistant Commissioner Administrative, on 25th April, 1906 as to the arrest of three men named Gerothwohl, Lavalette, and Timmings, on charges of being drunk and disorderly at Piccadilly on 7th inst., Boat Race night, the two former alleging that they were arrested outside Vine Street Station when about to give in their cards on behalf of Timmings.

First Witness, P.C. 43 CR. Isaacson.

(A.C.A.) Now I want your account of this incident on Boatrace night—I mean when Gerothwohl, Lavalette and Timmings were arrested. I want to know your share in it. First of all, where were you and what was your duty?—I was patrolling the Quadrant, Regent Street. I was spoken to by P.C. 6 C R. Wallington; we saw a great crowd.

You were patrolling the Quadrant?—Yes, Sir, in Regent Street; there was a great crowd and a great noise.

Where were you patrolling from?—Air Street to Piccadilly Circus, Sir. P.C. 6 C R. said there is a disturbance there. We crossed over Piccadilly to where you turn to the Geological Museum. We got to the Church passage and we saw several hundred people, and they were shouting.

You went down Air Street?—Yes, Sir, and crossed Piccadilly. They were shouting and also making a booing noise with their mouth. I spoke to them, but they would not stop.

Who did you speak to?—The crowd in general, Sir.

A general caution, as it were?—Yes, Sir; that is quite right. They took no notice of us; we got in front of the crowd and I saw five men walking arm in arm, and as they seemed to be the leaders I arrested them.

Which way were they all going?—To the west on the south side of Piccadilly.

On the footway?—Yes, Sir.

And not in the roadway?—Some of them had to get in the roadway; they took no notice of me and I arrested them.

Who did you arrest?—Timmings, Sir.

He was along with the others?—Yes, Sir; he was arm in arm with them, and they were all across the footway.

What did you think in your mind the arrest was made for?—Disorderly conduct and drunkenness, Sir.

Did you think Timmings was drunk?—Yes, Sir, I could see that when I took hold of him, I handed him to P.C. 427, and I arrested Lavalette at the same time as Wallington arrested Gerothwohl.

He was with you when you made the arrests?—P.C. Wallington was, Sir.

Was he working with you as a double patrol?—No, Sir, he spoke to me about the noise and we went to see what it was. We saw this crowd and we thought it was our duty to speak to them and try and get them to go peacefully.

You arrested Timmings and handed him to P.C. 427?—Yes, Sir.

Did you call P.C. 427?—No, Sir.

He saw the crowd, I suppose?—Yes, Sir.

And came up?—Yes, Sir.

And you handed Timmings to him?—Yes, Sir, and I arrested Lavalette, and Wallington had the other man.

And what did you arrest him for?—Disorderly conduct and making a noise after being cautioned by the police.

Gerothwohl was arrested by another constable?—Yes, Sir, P.C. Wallington.

When you arrested Lavalette did you lay hands on him?—I took him to the station in custody, Sir.

Where did you catch hold of him?—By the arm, Sir.

Where?—In Piccadilly, opposite the church.

Are you quite sure?—Positive, Sir.

Did you hold him when you took him to the station?—I took him by the arm, Sir.

How did he go, you consider he was drunk?—He was drunk, Sir.

Was he staggering or simply in an excited state?—I could tell he was drunk, Sir, by his actions and his appearance.

Did he say anything then?—He did say something to the Inspector, Sir.

But while you were taking him?—No, Sir, he was charged with the other two; the charge was read over to them by the Inspector and they made no reply.

Timmings, Gerothwohl and Lavalette were sort of leading the crowd?—Yes, Sir, and others, had there been any assistance there would have been two others charged at the same time.

You were not able to arrest the others?—No, Sir, they were arm in arm across the footway.

There were five of them?—Yes, Sir.

Are you sure of that?—Positive, Sir.

What were they doing?—Walking along arm in arm shouting and swearing as they usually do when they are out on the spree, and making a noise with their mouth—a booing—and they took no notice of cautions.

As soon as you took them into custody what was the behaviour of the crowd—what happened? You crossed the road?—Yes, Sir, to the Station.

Which way did you take to the Station?—Piccadilly and Swallow Street, Sir.

Not up the passage?—No Sir.

Down into Vine Street?—Yes Sir.

Did the crowd follow?—I did not notice them, I took the man Lavalette to the Station and did not notice.

You surely know if there was a crowd?—There might have been, Sir, I did not notice, as there was a lot of people about then.

They did not interfere with you?—No, Sir.

You know that the defendants Lavalette and Gerothwohl assert that they were not arrested till they got to the Station?—I heard that evidence in the Police Court, Sir.

They stated that in Court?—Yes, Sir, but it is false.

Did Lavalette state that?—When he gave evidence he only corroborated the other man—Gerothwohl.

Where do you say you took him into custody?—South side of Piccadilly.

(Supt. C.) He had Lavalette.

(Supt. Moore) Did the Magistrate ask you where you took him into custody?—Yes, Sir.

And you gave the same reply in the witness-box that you have given now?—Yes, Sir.

(A.C.A.) Did you say anything about that they wanted to give evidence on the way to the Station?—Not to me, Sir. They never spoke to me.

You had nothing to do with any further arrest?—Only the arrest of Timmings, who I handed to P.C. 427.

And you saw no other police whom you could get to help you to make the arrests?—There was none on the spot; if I had looked for some I might have missed the other two. Had there been any other police there the whole five would have been placed in the dock at the same time.

Gerothwohl and Lavalette denied any knowledge of Timmings?—Yes, Sir.

Of your own knowledge you know they were arm-in-arm?—Yes, Sir. They were all under the influence of drink.

Gerothwohl asserts that you took his stick and broke it?—I did not touch the stick until the pieces were handed to me by the other Constable together with the other things. P.C. Wallington was cross-examined by Counsel; he admitted that the stick was broken when he attempted to get it from the prisoner; he was asked in a polite manner for it, he said he should not give it up, and it was taken from him. I did not see it until it was handed to me by P.C. Wallington. I was also asked by Counsel about the stick, and he accused me of taking it and breaking it on my knee at the Station.

You tied them up together?—Yes, Sir, I tied the stick, and I think two pocket knives up.

Would that be in the prisoner's presence? Did he see you?—No, Sir, they were searched and put in the cells; afterwards I tied the property up.

Tied the stick up with the pocket knives?—Yes, Sir, two pocket knives.

You tied them up?—Yes, Sir.

The prisoner did not see you?—No, Sir, he was taken to the cells. Lavalette had a stick as well, Sir.

Did he give it up?—Yes, Sir, he gave it up, and it was laid on the table; I laid it there.

Did he give it to you?—Yes, Sir; I asked him for it.

At the station?—Yes, Sir.

SECOND WITNESS, P.C. 6 C.R. WALLINGTON.

I want you to tell me about this incident in Vine Street, when three men named Gerothwohl, Lavalette and Timmings were arrested on Boat Race night. Tell me from the beginning. Where were you on duty?—On the west side of Piccadilly Circus, Sir.

On the west side of Piccadilly Circus. What was the first that you saw of this incident?—A crowd of people came up Regent Street from southwards and also from Coventry Street.

Down Regent Street?—Up Regent Street.

(Supt.) Coming from Lower Regent Street, Sir.

(Witness) We went down and tried to break them up.

(A.C.A.) Who went?—I did myself. We got in front of them.

Do you mean P.C. Isaacson?—He was there on the Circus, Sir. We went down to try and break them up. They were arm in arm, and anyone who came along had to get out of their way. P.C. Isaacson arrested Timmings and handed him to P.C. 427.

He arrested Timmings?—Yes, Sir. He got in front of the crowd.

These men, Gerothwohl, Lavalette, and Timmings were in front?—Yes, Sir, arm in arm.

The whole lot arm in arm?—Possibly five or six, Sir.

On the footway?—Yes, Sir.

They were more or less leading the crowd?—Yes, Sir, they were.

What did you do then? Did you speak to them first?—Yes, Sir, and asked them to desist; they were shouting and booing.

Who made the first arrest?—P.C. Isaacson, he took Timmings and handed him to P.C. 427, who came upon the scene later.

And what was your action?—I arrested Gerothwohl and took him to the station.

What was he arrested for in your judgment?—He was drunk and arm in arm with others.

And that was the disorder?—Yes, Sir.

Did he offer any resistance?—No, Sir, not until we got to the station, when I asked him for his stick twice and he refused to give it to me.

Where was he when you arrested him?—In Piccadilly Sir.

On the pavement or in the footway?—At the edge of the pavements, Sir.

On the south or north side?—South side, Sir, by St. James's Church.

You took him by the arm?—By the sleeve, Sir.

And you kept hold of him?—Until I got to the station, Sir.

And which way did you go to the station?—Across, Piccadilly and up Swallow Street, Sir.

Did you all go together—the three of you?—P. C. Isaacson arrested Timmings and he handed him to P. C. 427, he arrested Lavalette and I arrested Gerothwohl and followed three or four yards behind.

You came last?—Yes Sir.

Was there a crowd there?—There was a crowd outside the station, Sir, which was dispersed.

That was after the charge had been taken. Did the crowd follow?—There was a crowd, Sir.

Did they press upon you at all?—No, Sir, nothing to speak of.

Just followed?—That is all, Sir.

Of course you have heard it stated that the defendents say they were not arrested till they got to Vine Street Station?—Yes, Sir.

That is not correct?—They were arrested in Piccadilly, Sir.

When you got to the station the charge was taken, then what about this stick?—I asked the prisoner Gerothwohl for the stick twice, and he refused to give it up. He held it up in a threatening attitude, as if he was going to strike me, and I took hold of it, and in the struggle it was broken.

What sort of a stick was it?—A cane.

(Supt. C.) A Malacca cane, Sir.

(Witness.) I did not take much notice of it; I put it together and P. C. Isaacson put it away.

(A.C.A.) How do you mean you put it together?—I put the two pieces together.

You picked the pieces up?—Yes, Sir.

What did you do with them?—They were put in the Inspector's Office and put with other prisoners' property.

Who put them there?—I did, Sir.

Was Gerothwohl much excited?—He was really excited, Sir. I thought he was drunk.

In addition to being drunk he was excited?—Yes, Sir.

He was more excited at the station than he was in the street?—Yes, Sir.

At any rate he did not resist in the street?—No, Sir.

There were others there who were disorderly besides these, whom you did not arrest?—Yes, Sir, we could have done if we had had more help.

Did you see any other police about?—There were such crowds about and everybody was mixed up so we could not see. Isaacson and myself got in front of the crowd to try and break them up in the first place.

You got in front of this half-dozen?—Yes, Sir, we got in front to try and break them up.

Why did you pick Gerothwohl particularly?—He was a ringleader.

You say there were five or six ringleaders?—The others cleared out of it, Sir.

And these did not or were not quick enough?—Yes, Sir

Gerothwohl did not appear to make any effort to get away?—He kept booing and shouting, and so did Lavalette. Timmings was arm in arm with them; he did not shout so much as the others, he was more drunk.

He was drunk?—Yes, Sir.

You did not call upon any private witnesses for assistance?—No, Sir.

Nor with a view to getting any evidence?—No, Sir.

I suppose there were plenty of people there by what you say?—Yes, Sir, there were plenty of people there, there was quite a crowd, as usual on a Saturday night after the Boat Race.

(Supt. C.) Very much more than usual this night.

(A.C.A.) You say that the evidence likely to be got perhaps would not help much; you would be likely to get anybody who would give evidence for the police at that sort of gathering, I mean?—No, Sir

And anybody would come forward one side or the other, as a matter of fact?—No, Sir.

(Supt. C.) No, Sir.

(A.C.A.) Not to back up the complaint?

(Supt. C.) No, Sir.

(A.C.A.) It was at 12.15 a.m. was it not?—Yes, Sir.

Is that the time they were charged?

(Supt. C.) That was the time they were taken to the station, they were taken into custody at 12.10; there were so few police in Piccadilly, these and others were arm in arm and extended along the footway near Coventy Street.

(A.C.A.) This was about closing time, was it not?

(Supt.) Yes, Sir, they close at 12 o'clock.

(Supt. C.) There were ten P.C.'s between Bond Street and the Circus.

(A.C.A.) These two really had nothing to do with Piccadilly?

(Supt. C.) No, Sir, they were only in the Circus.

(Witness.) We went down in consequence of the crowd.

(A.C.A.) It is just possible that some of the P.C.'s were away with prisoners?

(Supt. C.) No, Sir, there were only about six prisoners taken in at that time; there was only one from Piccadilly Circus, and that was at 11.55, that was for begging. There was nothing taken in from Piccadilly until 12.20.

Third Witness, P.C. 427 Divers.

(A.C.A.) Tell me now what you saw in connection with the arrest of the three men Gerothwohl, Lavalette and Timmings on Boat Race night?—Shortly after 12 o'clock, Sir, on the 8th inst., I was on duty in Sackville Street, which runs at right angles with Piccadilly, and hearing shouts and a great noise coming from the direction of Piccadilly Circus——

You were not on duty in Piccadily by rights, then?—No, Sir, it was in consequence of the noise that I went there. When I got by St. James's Church P.C. 34 C.R. handed me over Timmings.

When you got to the corner of Sackville Street did you see a crowd?—Yes, Sir, I saw a great crowd coming along going west Piccadilly, making awful noises, and some of them jumping about.

Any more conspicious than others?—I did not notice that, there was such a large number.

In the roadway?—No, Sir, on the footway.

Did they block the footway?—They were kept going as far as possible by police, but they were going very slowly.

What then?—On his being handed over to my custody I took him (Timmings) to the station.

Did you know what he was arrested for?—He was then very drunk, Sir.

Did P.C. Isaacson hand him to you?—Yes, Sir, and told me to take him to the station.

And what did you do?—I took him to the station, Sir.

Straight away?—Yes, Sir.

Which way did you go?—Swallow Street, Sir, that is right opposite the church.

Into Vine Street?—Yes, Sir.

Did the crowd follow?—I did not notice any crowd following, Sir.

Did the other constables follow you?—I was in the station about a minute when they came in with the other two.

Did you see the other two arrested?—No, Sir.

You turned straight away with your prisoner?—Yes, Sir.

And took him along?—Yes, Sir.

Did you know the other two men were arrested when you left?—No, Sir, I did not.

You did not know what the other two constables were going to do?—I saw them turn, that is all. I went direct to the station.

What did you think? Did you think they were going to arrest anyone else or not?—I did not know, Sir, the prisoner was handed to me.

No, No. Did you think they were about to make other arrests?—I thought they were about to, Sir.

And they handed you one man to get rid of him?—Yes, Sir.

That is what you imagined?—Yes, Sir.

What happened when you got to the station?—I was there about a minute when P.C. 6 C.R. and 43 C.R. came in. P.C. 43 came in first with the prisoner Lavalette and 6 C.R. with Gerothwohl; they were all three then placed in the dock, Gerothwohl was asked for his stick, but he would not give it up, and held it in a threatening manner to P.C. Wallington, who took hold of the stick, and in his endeavour to get it away from Gerothwohl it was broken. I then went out on my patrol.

Had Lavalette got a stick?—I could not say, Sir.

You did not notice?—No, Sir.

Had your prisoner (Timmings) got a stick?—No Sir.

As regards the man you had in custody (Timmings), he made no complaint?—He made no complaint whatever, Sir.

And that is about all you saw of it?—That is all, Sir.

Did you hear the evidence at the police court?—I was there at the second hearing on Wednesday, Sir.

That would be on the remand?—Yes, Sir.

Did you see any other police about when the arrest was made?—When going from Sackville Street I saw the P.C.'s trying to get the crowd along, but as I say, the prisoner was handed to me and I came away to the station.

That would be Isaacson and Wallington you saw?—Yes, Sir.

Besides them, were there police about?—I think there was, Sir, but I did not notice; there was a lot of cabs there, and I could not see properly.

You went towards the crowd of your own free will, you were not called?—No, Sir.

You were simply attracted by the crowd?—Yes, Sir.

And went?—They were making such a noise, and I went there.

FOURTH WITNESS, INSPECTOR BERRY.

(A.C.A.) Tell me about this charge against the three men Gerothwohl, Lavalette, and Timmings, as far as you can?—They were brought to the station about 12.15 on Sunday morning, all three together—well, practically together—Timmings was brought in first, and the other two a little behind, almost touching, they were very violent. They were all put in the dock. Timmings was quiet, but the other two were very violent, especially Gerothwohl, a big, powerful man. He had a stick in his hand and he was waving it about in a dangerous manner, and P.C. Wallington, who arrested him, asked him for it in the usual way, but he refused to give it up; he asked him twice and I asked him once, and as he refused to give it up I directed the constable to take it from him. Gerothwohl gripped the stick, and in taking it away it naturally broke.

Had Lavalette a stick?—Yes, Sir, but he gave it up quietly when asked.

Then they were charged with being drunk and disorderly?—Yes, Sir, the constables said they saw them together in Piccadilly arm in arm drunk and pushing people off the footway.

Did they say anything about any others?—No, Major, nothing transpired about any others.

And they were charged?—Yes, Sir, they said nothing. I read the charge over to them most distinctly.

They did not deny anything?—No, Sir; if they had done, or if they had denied that they were drunk, I should have called the doctor. I had no doubt in my own mind as to their condition or I should have called him.

They said nothing to you about calling a doctor?—No, Sir, they did not deny the drunkenness or I should have called him.

You were in Court on the remand?—Yes, Sir.

Not at the first hearing?—No, Sir.

And afterwards did the constables tell you what happened?—Gerothwohl said they were coming to the station to give their cards of behalf of Timmings I questioned the constables on the matter and told them what had been said, and asked them if it was correct, and they both said "No, Sir, they were both arrested in Piccadilly."

It was denied then and there?—On the spot, Sir, most explicitly by both.

Did they persist in their statement?—Yes, Sir, and kept shouting about.

(Supt. C.) Did they persist in continuing the statement?—They kept shouting about. Gerothwohl was the spokesman, and Lavalette practically corroborated every word he said.

(A.C.A.) They stuck to it?—Yes, Sir, I questioned the constables very closely on the matter at the time and they both assured me there was no truth in it.

(Supt. C.) One of the the P.C.'s was patrolling Regent Street from Piccadilly Circus to Air Street and the other Piccadilly Circus from Piccadilly to Regent Street, in front of Swan and Edgars, and they would meet at the corner.

(Supt. Moore.) That is how they both came to be together, Sir.

(A.C.A.) Yes.

(Supt. C.) I think the witness (P.C. 427) was wrong when he said they were not in the roadway. I think Wallington and Isaacson will both tell you that the roadway was half filled by this crowd coming along.

(A.C.A.) Perhaps he was there only for a moment had the prisoner handed to him, went away and did not take particular notice. He evidently confirms the constable's statement that there was a big crowd. (To Witness.) When you took the charge, who was in the Charge Room, other police?—Inspector Randall, who was waiting with two men he had brought into custody.

He had two men in custody?—Yes Sir, they were waiting then.

(Supt. C.) He took them in charge five minutes after these others were arrested; that charge was brought in at 12.20, this charge was brought in at 12.10.

(Witness.) There was the reserve men and the men with the charges. Mr. Randall and he had another constable with him.

(A.C.A.) He followed the other three in?—Yes, Sir.

(To Superintendent.): Is there any further evidence?—Only the Reserve man, he can speak as to the condition of the men and the stick incident.

(A.C.A.) Has he reported?—Yes, Sir.

And the constable on the door?—He is here, Sir; he has also reported. He saw them come in, and he can prove that they were arrested further down.

The only private witnesses in the Charge Room at the time were these other two in custody?—(Witness.) Yes, Sir.

(Superintendent.) They were not in the Charge Room, when they (the men) were brought in?—No, Sir.

(A.C.A.) There were no private persons?—No, Sir.

Simply the Reserve man?—Yes, Sir.

FIFTH WITNESS, P.C. WELLBELOVE.

(A.C.A.) This is the constable who was on the door.

(Superintendent.) Outside the station on the front door, Sir.

(A.C.A.) On Boat-race night you know three men, Gerothwohl, Lavalette, and Timmings, were arrested, did you see them?—I saw three being brought in while I was on duty ouside the station. I saw one being brought in by P.C. 427, and shortly after that I saw two more being brought in by P.C.'s Isaacson and Wallington.

Which way did they come?—Through Swallow Street, Sir.

You saw all three brought in?—Yes, Sir.

Was there any difference in the way they were brought in?—P.C. 427 Divers came in first, about a minute or two minutes before Wallington and Isaacson. There was a large crowd following the other two prisoners.

There was?—Yes, Sir.

Were they interfering with police at all?—No, Sir; just following the prisoners to the station.

Following?—Yes, Sir.

When you saw them come in were you under the impression they were both in custody?—Yes, Sir, because both P.C.'s were walking by their side.

Did you notice if the constables had hold of them?—I could not see, Sir; there was such a crowd.

But the crowd was not in front of them?—They were all round—each side and behind. I noticed the P.C.'s at their side.

Was there any pause at the door, or did they go straight in?—Straight in, Sir.

No stop, no discussion?—No, Sir, simply walked straight in the door.

Were they in any way violent (the prisoners, that is)?—Not in my view, Sir.

After they passed you, you did not see any more of them?—No, Sir; I dispersed the crowd that followed.

You were the only man on the door?—Yes, Sir.

SIXTH WITNESS, P.C. 438 WALSEY.

(A.C.A.) You were on reserve on the night of the Boat Race?—Yes, Sir.

At Vine Street. Tell me what you saw in connection with the arrest of Gerothwohl, Lavalette, and Timmings?—I saw the three gentlemen mentioned brought in.

You saw them brought in?—Yes, Sir, by P.C.'s 6 CR. and 43 CR.

Do you remember what order they came in?—I really could not tell you, Sir.

You do not know who came in first?—No, Sir. I was engaged with a prisoner in the cells at the moment the Inspector was investigating the charge.

At any rate, did you see them actually come in?—Yes, Sir.

What happened?—They sat down on the seat pending the Inspector's investigation, and at the moment the charge was taken I was engaged with another prisoner in the cell.

When you had finished with the other prisoner what happened?—I came back and saw the stick lying on the table broken in half, and the prisoners were in the dock, the charge was about to be taken.

Do you know how the stick was broken?—I do not, Sir.

You didn't see it broken?—No, Sir.

Then the charge was taken?—Yes, Sir.

What did the prisoners say, did you hear?—They made no reply to the charge.

No reply?—No, Sir.

Did you hear them say anything about what happened at all?—No, Sir, they did not make any statement at all in my presence.

Where is his report?—I have not reported, Sir.

(Superintendent.) I thought he had.

Did you put them in the cells?—Yes, Sir.

Did they say anything then?—No, Sir, not at the time.

You had nothing to do with their property?—Nothing whatever, Sir.

Then all you saw of it was they were brought into the station, and then your attention was taken up by another prisoner?—Yes, Sir.

Then when you got back you found the broken stick?—Yes, Sir, and the men were in the dock.

They were in the dock?—Yes, Sir.

SEVENTH WITNESS, INSPECTOR RANDALL.

(A.C.A.) You were present at Vine Street on Boat Race night during part of the time when the charge against these three men, Gerothwohl, Lavalette, and Timmings, was taken?—They were in the dock as I entered the charge room, Sir.

They were in the dock?—Yes, Sir.

What stage had the case got to then?—Inspector Berry was taking their names prior to entering the charge against them.

Had the stick been broken then?—That was taken away from the man before I arrived; it was taken before he was placed in the dock. I saw nothing of it.

They were taking names and addresses?—Yes, Sir; just handing their cards to the Inspector taking the charge.

What did they say; did you hear?—They were protesting, particularly one of them; I don't know which by name, but the stoutest one of the three. He was protesting very much on being charged.

What were the grounds of the protest?—He said he came to the station behind the other man who had been brought there.

And he kept saying that?—Yes, Sir.

Did either of the others say anything much?—I did not hear the others say anything.

Who was in the charge room when you got there?—There were the three constables, the three prisoners; I don't know whether there was another prisoner waiting to be charged. I am not quite certain. I took in a prisoner and a constable brought another in.

With you?—Yes, Sir.

They were arrested?—Yes, Sir.

But not in connection with this?—No, Sir.

They were probably taken away from the same crowd?—Yes, Sir; but higher up, near the Princes Restaurant.

(Superintendent.) That would be about 50 or 60 yards higher up, they were charged about five minutes later.

(A.C.A.) What were they charged with?—Drunk and disorderly, rolling about and jostling people; they were arm in arm and shouting in a general sort of manner.

Did you see them?—I arrested one of them, Sir.

You noticed the disorder?—Yes, Sir.

And arrested one of the men, and the constable the other?—Yes, Sir, they were brothers.

(Supt. Moore.) That you did not know at the time?—No, Sir, that had nothing to do with the charge.

(Supt. C.) It is a question whether they were not continuing the disorder and were subsequently arrested?

(A.C.A.) That might be. (To Inspector.) When you got to Vine Street with the prisoner was there any crowd outside the station?—No, Major.

No crowd following you?—No, I think not, Sir; there were a good many people about the neighbourhood, but I do not think they followed.

And you went through Swallow Street with your prisoner, and you do not think there was anybody following?—No, Sir.

Can you form any opinion as to the condition of these three men?—They appeared very excited. I did not take any particular notice of them as I was not concerned in the charge.

EIGHTH WITNESS, S.D. INSPECTOR SMITH.

(A.C.A.) What was the first you saw of these three men?—When I went down to the cells with you, Major, that was the first I saw of them.

It was?—Yes, Sir.

Who was the spokesman then?—Gerothwohl, Sir, that was the man that came to the trap door and demanded to see a doctor. He wished to see his own doctor, but I told him our experience was that they would not as a rule come to the station.

He said something about bail?—I told him it would be far better for him to give me some address that we could verify, so that we could let him go, and he could then see a doctor.

Didn't you suggest that the doctor could bail him if he wished as well as attend him professionally?—I suggested he should give me some address that we could verify, and we could let him go and see a doctor, as our experience was that doctors won't come to the station.

I have a strong impression that you suggested, or he suggested, that the doctor might do both?—I do not remember that, Sir.

I think it was his idea, and that the doctor could bail him?—Certainly we should take the doctor's bail, Sir.

That was the first you saw of him?—Yes, Sir, I had only just come in in front of you.

They had been there about an hour, it was about one o'clock?—Just about one o'clock, Sir, I had just come in.

Had he asked for the doctor before that?—No, Sir, he had not.

(Supt. Moore.) A doctor is generally on the premises up till about two o'clock?—Yes, Sir, he could have seen the divisional surgeon, who was there.

(A.C.A.) You can throw no light on what passed?—I was not at the station till just previous to you, Sir; I left the station about nine o'clock to patrol.

What had become of all the police?—It was Boat Race day, and we had the majority of them in Coventry Street, etc., we had the usual patrols along Piccadilly, near the church, where the arrests took place.

But they were not there?—I spoke to some at the Circus.

What had become of the men from Piccadilly?—I had to send some out of the Circus down to the Continental, as when these people leave the Empire they flock there.

And they would be there?—They would be at the back of the crowd, as they come up from the Continental. I arranged for the Inspector to take half a dozen of the reserve men to see the Continental clear and work up Regent Street.

Apparently they did not, because there were no police with the crowd when these two constables went to them?—The police would come up at the end of the crowd driving them up.

That might have been.

(Superintendent.) They usually go at the back and drive them up; there were just half a dozen men driving them up to get them well ahead.

(A.C.A.) As regards this question, Mr. Smith, you can throw no light on it?—I know nothing of the facts of the case, at all, Sir.

POLICE REPORTS.

Great Marlborough Street Station,
2nd May, 1906.

With reference to report called for re Eva d'Angely, I beg to report that at 11.30 p.m. on the night of the 24th April I was on duty in Regent Street when I saw Eva d'Angely stop and accost a gentleman mid way between Maddox Street and Conduit Street, she then walked on about 50 yards and then crossed to the opposite side, and when near Foubert's Place she stopped another gentleman, she then walked on to Argyll Place and there stopped the third gentleman, she crossed to the opposite side of Regent Street and walked down to where I was standing near Maddox Street. I then asked her why she stopped those gentlemen, she replied "Me no speak English." I told her to behave herself and not accost gentlemen, she replied "Oui, oui," smiled, and walked on, and when near Conduit Street she stopped another, I then took her into custody, as I have previously seen her do the same thing. I watched her on the 24th. It was during February I first noticed her, and during April I have seen her on several occasions accosting men in Regent Street.

With reference to report called for re Eva d'Angely,

I beg to report that as near as I can recollect it was about the middle of February when I first saw her stop a gentleman in Regent Street. In March I was posted to 4 beat of the second section, close to the Regent Circus, when I saw her almost nightly between the hours of 10.30 and 12.30 accosting gentleman in Oxford Street near the Circus.

During April I have been posted to Regent Circus fixed point, and when I have been on late duty I have seen her nightly behaving as above. On the night of the 24th of April, shortly after 11 o'clock, I saw her accost a gentleman at Regent Street, near Regent Street, and I then cautioned her as to her conduct. She then proceeded down Regent Street in the direction of Piccadilly Circus.

With reference to report called for re Eva d'Angely, charged with being a prostitute,

I beg to report that I have been posted to Oxford Circus fixed point during the last month. I have seen d'Angely on several occasions in Regent Street between the hours of 11 p.m. and 12 night. I have from time to time seen her speak to gentlemen who were strangers to me, and was under the impression that the woman was a prostitute.

Great Marlborough Street Station,

I beg to report that at 11.35 p.m., 24th inst., P.C. 429 Page brought to this station Eva d'Angely, a French woman, of 25, Twyford Mansions, Little Marylebone Street, whom he charged with being a common prostitute behaving in a riotous and indecent manner at Regent Street.

The police-constable's statement was to the effect that he had seen this woman accost a gentleman between Maddox Street and Conduit Street, she crossed to the opposite side where she accosted two others, and then recrossed when she was cautioned by the police-constable, notwithstanding which she accosted another gentleman, and was then taken into custody.

In reply to my questions as to whether the police-constable had any knowledge of the woman he assured me that he had known her for some time as a prostitute, and that during the month he had practically seen her walking Regent Street every night.

The police-constable preferring the charge having been on duty in the vicinity for some time and having had considerable opportunity for becoming acquainted with the class of women who frequent Regent Street, the charge was taken by me in the usual way. She was bailed by her husband at 1.20 a.m.

It may be mentioned that when charged not the least protestation of innocence or objection was made by Madame d'Angely, she appeared to accept the situation as a natural result of her conduct in the streets, and there was nothing to indicate that the statement of the constable was other than strictly accurate.

She appeared before G. L. Denman, Esq., on 25th ult., when corroborative evidence was given by P.C.'s 136 Lucas and 440 Sims, and a remand ordered for inquiries.

Great Marlboro' Street Station,

2nd May, 1906.

Referring to the attached,

I beg to report that on 25th ult. I was in Marlborough Street Police Court when Madame d'Angely was charged with soliciting prostitution in Regent Street.

After evidence of the three constables (reports attached) had been given, she stated that she wished to call her landlord to give evidence on her behalf.

The learned Magistrate remanded her until the 1st and directed that inquiry should be made to ascertain if anything was known respecting her and under what conditions she was living.

On leaving the court I saw Madame d'Angely and obtained from her the attached statement. She also informed me that she had been in the habit of walking down Regent Street to meet her husband, who generally went into the Café Royal, but she had no occasion to go down Regent Street on the night in question, as she had only left her husband a few minutes before at the corner of Regent Street and Oxford Street, and that Mr. Gaze, who let her the flat, would speak for her. also Mr. Rubens, 17, Porchester Gardens, who was with them on the night in question.

I saw Mr. Gaze, who informed me that he was an agent for letting flats, and about February last Mr. and Mrs. d'Angely came to him and inquired if he could let them a furnished flat. He agreed to do so, and an agreement was drawn up to let No. 25, Twyford Mansions furnished at a weekly rental of £2 12s. 6d. He had no knowledge of them previous; the references given resided in Paris, but he did not make inquiry there. He had no reason to find fault with them in the way they had conducted themselves, but he did not have much opportunity of seeing them. He promised to attend court, but did not wish his name mixed up in the case, therefore preferred not to give evidence. He did attend court, but did not give evidence.

I also saw Mr. Rubens, who stated that he was a commission agent, and on the night of 24th he called at Mr. d'Angely's flat on business about 10.45 p.m. He left and walked to Regent Street, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. d'Angely. On reaching the Circus they left Mrs. d'Angely and walked eastwards along Oxford Street for about 100 yards, when he took a cab and went home, leaving Mr. d'Angely in Oxford Street.

Mr. Rubens said he knew Mr. and Mrs. d'Angely as respectable people, and promised to attend court and give evidence, which he failed to do.

I also saw the owner of Twyford Mansions, who informed me that he knew nothing about Mr. and Mrs. d'Angely, the flat having been let by Mr. Gaze. He could not understand what Madame d'Angely was doing walking about Regent Street so late, and to prevent any trouble he had given them notice to quit.

On 1st Madame d'Angely appeared on remand, when I told the learned Magistrate that I had ascertained that she had been residing at her present address since February last, when they informed me that they came from Paris, and that Mr. d'Angely had informed me that he obtained his living as a dealer, and that he was very sorry that he allowed his wife to walk about Regent Street, and that he would see that it would not occur again.

The learned Magistrate discharged the prisoner, remarking as in the attached cutting from the "Daily Telegraph."

The abstract from the "Daily News" of my evidence is incorrect. I never made any mention of the prisoner's respectability, neither of her husband, as I had no opportunity of verifying their statements, and the person who said that he knew them for some time failed to attend Court.

The abstract from the "Daily Telegraph" submitted herewith is a fair report of the proceedings.

When remanding the case in the first instance, the learned Magistrate expressed himself perfectly satisfied with the police evidence, but as the prisoner said she could call witnesses he would give her facilities for doing so, and, when finally dealing with the case, he gave the prisoner the benefit of the doubt on the information I supplied, without expressing any opinion on the guilt or otherwise of the woman, or making adverse remarks on the police action.

In conclusion, I beg to call attention to the following facts:—

About 12 night, the 24th, I visited the prisoner, amongst others, while in the cells. She was then perfectly composed, and certainly did not appear to be that of an injured person.

I asked her if she could produce her marriage certificate. She informed me that she could not, as she had left it in Paris at a boarding house there, but she was unable to say where. She admits taking her present flat about the end of February, and that she was in London some time before staying in Kensington, but she does not know the address.

She admits having gone down the west side of Regent

Street, came back on the east side, and again started to go down on the west side when she was arrested. This is what P.C. Page said he saw her do.

P.C.s 429 Page and 440 Sims say that they have seen her frequenting Regent Street and vicinity for about three months.

During the month of February P.C. Page was point duty in Regent Circus, in March posted overstrength, and when not on beats usually patrolled Regent Circus and Oxford Street. In April night duty, 1 beat 3rd section, which takes Regent Street from Princes Street to Conduit Street. It will therefore be seen that he had ample opportunities of seeing her. The same applies to P.C. 440 Sims, who was also in the vicinity of Regent Street since February last.

The whole of the P.C.s concerned are good, reliable men, with over three years' service.

Mr. d'Angely swore in Court that he had an appointment to meet his wife at 11.30 p.m., 24th, in Regent Street, when, as a matter of fact, he only left her shortly before. He was unable to explain why he should have left his wife in Regent Circus. He says he has no regular source of income.

The circumstances of this case appeared to me to be very simple and similar to many other cases where women have been charged with soliciting, and having set up the defence that they were married and respectable, but on inquiry were afterwards convicted, and I therefore did not think that this was a case which should have been specially reported, in view of the fact that evidence was given by three reliable constables of what they had seen this woman do, and she did not call any evidence or cross-examine them to contradict it, also the expressions made use of by the Magistrate on the first hearing.

(Signed) F. Mackay, S.D. Insp.

Submitted. Although Madam d'Angely and Mr. M. d'Angely assert they are man and wife, neither can produce anything to prove them to be such; the woman states the cause of this being that she had left her marriage certificate in France at a place quite unknown to her, which is an extraordinary coincidence. If the constables saw what they say they did—and there appears no reason to doubt their word—it is quite clear that the woman was nothing better than a prostitute, and the action of P.-c. Page in arresting her for the conduct she was guilty of on the night of 24th ult. was only doing his duty.

The case was remanded with the view of an inquiry being made for the purpose of proving or disproving the statements of the prisoner and the man d'Angely, and S.D. Insp. Mackay was directed by the Magistrate to make that inquiry. The S.D. Insp. was in the court, and heard the evidence given, therefore knew exactly how the matter stood, and should have submitted the full facts for my information, so that I might then have forwarded it to Commissioner, with a recommendation that the matter be placed in the hand of Messrs. Wontners. It was clearly a case in which Police should have been legally represented, with a view to a proper cross-examination, etc., which would have put an entirely different complexion upon the case, and no doubt resulted differently, but no single word was mentioned to me as to what had happened, and I knew nothing of the matter in any way until the result appeared in Wednesday's daily newspapers.

The S.D. Inspector is generally a most careful and painstaking officer, and one who performs his duty excellently, but there was certainly a lack on his part in this instance.

Statement of Eva d'Angely, 25, Twyford Mansions, Little Marylebone Street.

I am 25 years of age, and was married in Algiers about 18 months ago. I have a certificate of marriage in Paris, but do not know the address. I came to England with my husband on 20th February last. With exception of three nights we have stayed at the present address since we have been in England. I have never previously been in England.

I left home about 10.45 p.m. last night in company of my husband and Mr. Rubens, 17, Porchester Gardens, W. We came along Oxford Street to Regent Circus, where I left my husband and his friend. I then walked down Regent Street, on the right side, as far as Vigo Street, to the Café Royal, and came back on the other side to near Verry's, where I was arrested.

I have on several occasions been in Regent Street alone between 10 and half-past. I have no lady friends in London. No policeman has ever spoken to me in the street.

November 4th, 1905.

Sir,—I am, as a member of the Bar, supporting the summons at the Clerkenwell Police Court, on Tuesday, against P.C. Gibbard, for assaulting a person named Clinch, who has for 13 years been in the employ of the General Post Office.

It is, in my opinion, essential for the interests of justice that I should see before Tuesday the statements which were given in writing to the Inspector at King's Cross Police Station, when the charge was entered—I believe about October 16th.

On enquiry at the King's Cross Police Station, I am informed that these statements have been sent to you, and that you will be returning them to the police-station.

I have to request that you will either fix a time on Monday when I can see them at Scotland Yard, or that you will direct the Inspector to show them to me on Monday, at King's Cross Police Station. In the latter event, kindly inform me.

Yours faithfully,

STATEMENT of James Clinch, Porter at Post Office, Mount Pleasant, 5, Benson Avenue, Upton Park, E.

The Inspector,—

I beg to state that whilst walking along Rosebery Avenue I went up a mews behind some posts, to make water. Whilst there I observed the policeman 215G, with this woman in the corner against a cart, the woman at the time having her clothes in an improper manner. She at once dropped her clothes, when the said policeman came up to me and struck me a severe blow; at the same time remarked to be off, and if I had any property up there. He also walked on my heels until I got on the footpath, when he struck me another severe blow on the left jaw, knocking me off my legs. I at once reported the matter to the sergeant, who was passing across the road, when he took the case up. I was on my way to the G.P.O., Mount Pleasant, due on duty at 12.30 a.m.

I beg to report, being in charge of 3rd Section, Night Duty, I was in Rosebery Avenue, near to John's Mews, at 12.15 a.m., 16th inst., when a man came to me and stated he had just previously been down the above mews to urinate, and when doing so he saw a policeman at the back of a van, with a woman. The policeman came from behind the van, and said to him, "Clear out. You have no business down here." At the same time struck him on the face with his fist. Just then I saw a woman come out of the mews into Rosebery Avenue. She went in the direction of Finsbury Town Hall. I went after her, and stopped her at the corner of Tysoe Street. I said to her, "What have you been doing down the mews?" She replied, "I have been down to make water." I then saw P.C. 215 Gibbard come out of the mews. He came up to me. I said to him, "A gentleman has just complained to me that you have assaulted him down John's Mews by striking him in the face with your fist." P.C. Gibbard replied, "It is a lie, sergeant. I have not assaulted him." I asked the man to accompany me and the police-constable to the station, where the complaint could be enquired into. I then accompanied complainant to the station.

King's Cross Road Station. G Division.
16th October, 1905.

I beg to report that at 12.20 a.m., 16th inst., James Clinch, of No. 5, Benson Avenue, Upton Park, E., a porter employed in Inland Letter Department, Mount Pleasant, came to station, accompanied by P.S. 18 Lane and P.C. 215G Gibbard.

Clinch stated that a few minutes before 12 night, 15th inst., he went into the mews in Rosebery Avenue, almost opposite Finsbury Town Hall, to urinate, and when he got there he saw P.C. Gibbard at the rear of some carts there, with a woman who had her clothing lifted. On seeing him the police-constable came towards him, asked what he was doing there, struck him on the left side of the face with his fist, walked on his heels until they reached the footway in Rosebery Avenue, and then struck him again on left side of face with his fist. I asked Clinch if he would put his complaint into writing, and he elected to do so himself.

Francesco Deangealis, an Italian, residing at 31, Warner Street, who accompanied Clinch to the station, stated he saw the police-constable push him, Clinch.

The woman referred to above, Freya Lehmann, who stated she was a housemaid, residing at No. 23, Swinton Street, W.C., also accompanied P.S. Lane to the station. She stated that she went up the mews to make water, when the police-constable came up, asked what she was doing, and ordered her away. She denied that anything improper had taken place or was about to take place between her and the police-constable.

After he had been some little time at the station, Clinch complained of feeling pain on left jaw, and asked that a doctor might examine his face. Previously to this I had examined his face, and could see no mark or redness upon it.

I sent for Dr. Caunter, divisional surgeon, who attended, examined Clinch, and then certified in Occurrence Book as follows:—"At 1.40 a.m. I examined James Clinch. This man complains of injury to his left jaw. On examination I cannot find any trace of injury either on the outside of the face or inside the mouth. In my opinion, if there had been any severe blows on the spot pointed out to me by the man there would be, as a result, a cut on the inside of the cheek, as there is a jagged tooth in the upper jaw in this position."

The police-constable, in presence of Clinch, denied having assaulted him as alleged, but admitted having pushed him.

Clinch, whose hours at Mount Pleasant are from 12.20 till 7.30 a.m., said he would consider what he should do in the matter, and would call at station when proceeding to work on 17th inst.

Certificate for attendance at station has not yet been issued to Divisional-Surgeon. Statements of Clinch and witnesses, and reports from P.S. 18 Lane and P.C. 215 Gibbard are attached.

F. GADD, Inspector.

Submitted.—Application was made for a summons against the police-constable, 16th, but the Magistrate declined to grant it unless the complaint was reduced to writing in the form of an information.

The application was renewed, 17th, with the complaint in writing, upon which a summons was granted, and is returnable 27th inst.

ALTFULDISCH'S AND MAURER'S CASES.

POLICE REPORTS.

Great Marlborough Street,
"C" Division,
18th June, 1906.

I beg to report that about 12.30 a.m. 17th December last, whilst passing through Old Compton Street, Soho, in company of Inspector Manning, I saw a large crowd in Greek Street, near the Café Turk. We hurried up Greek Street, and found about 40 or 50 foreigners fighting and quarrelling. We tried to disperse them, and found it necessary to arrest one of them who gave the name of Wilhelm Mauder, a German, of 31, Thorn Street, Barnes, whom I handed over to P.C. 134 Fleet, who had come up, and directed him to take Mauder to the station. Amongst the crowd—still quarrelling, I recognised Ferdinand Altfuldisch, a tailor, of 17, Great Marlborough Street. I told him to go away. He shouted, "We shan't, why should we for the f——g English police? Don't think you have a ponce to deal with." I arrested him. He struggled and called on the crowd to assist him, shouting, "Don't let the bulldog police take me." With the assistance of Inspector Manning we got him into Soho Square, where he tried to trip me up. We fell, and he caught hold of the railings and kept calling on the crowd to get him away. We forcibly removed him from the railings, and got into Carlisle Street, when the crowd surged round us and one among them, Theodore Rappett, got in front of me and caught hold of Altfuldisch's arm and tried to get him away. He was then arrested by Inspector Manning, who went on in front of me, and Altfuldisch walked after him into Poland Street, where he again became violent, and I obtained the assistance of P.S. Crayford and P.C. 79 Miles. He struggled and was very violent. He was placed in the waiting room waiting for other charges to be disposed of. He was brought out in about ten minutes and charged with disorderly conduct and using obscene language in the street. He made no complaint of having been assaulted or called a ponce, and there is not a particle of truth in the accusation that he was assaulted or that he was called a ponce.

On 18th he appeared before G. L. Denman, Esq., at Marlborough Street, and was defended by Mr. Wisbey, solicitor. After evidence for the prosecution was given, a remand was asked for to call witnesses for the defence without asking any question or making any complaint. He was remanded until 26th in one surety of £20.

On 26th he again appeared and was then defended by counsel, instructed by Mr. Wisbey, and an officer connected with the "Police and Public" Vigilance Society. It was then alleged that Altfuldisch was assaulted in the street and in the station. (See notes of evidence.)

After hearing evidence for the defence the learned magistrate told the prisoner that he did not believe a word he had said, and those whom he called his friends appeared to be of very little assistance to him as they had contradicted themselves upon many points, and fined Altfuldisch 20s. or 14 days.

Mauder and Rappert did not contest the case, and they were fined, the former 10s. or seven days, and the latter 20s. or 14 days. I have known Altfuldisch personally for about 18 months. He works as a tailor during the day, but at night he is usually to be seen in Soho in the company of betting men.

Reports from officers concerned attached.

(Signed) F. MACKAY, S.D. Inspector.

Submitted.—It is clear from the reports of the S.D. Inspector and Inspector the charge was a proper one. Altfuldisch in his evidence states he was nowhere near the crowd where the disorder was going on, but was standing on the pavement in the front of a door when he was pushed and hustled by S.D. Inspector Mackay, and by the latter called a ponce, and that the spot at which he was standing was between the two crowds that had assembled.

The S.D. Inspector and Inspector deny such was the case, and it is certainly altogether incompatible with their evidence, and the answers of Altfuldisch to the cross-examination by D.S. Inspector Mackay prove that he must have been in the crowd, for had he been away from either he would not have been arrested, for it is hardly likely the Inspector would interfere with a person standing quietly by himself away from a crowd of disorderly persons, arrest him without cause, and allow the crowd to continue the disorder.

Altfuldisch was present in the disorderly mob when the inspectors arrived on the scene, and was taking an active part in what was going on. He had an opportunity given him to go away, but this he refused to do, which resulted in his arrest, and this which was a perfectly legal one. Had such not been the case the learned magistrate would not have made the remarks to him he did.

Great Marlborough Street Station,
"C" Division,
18th June, 1906.

I beg to report that at 12.30 a.m. 17th December last, whilst passing along Old Compton Street, in company with S.D. Inspector Mackay, I saw a large crowd in Greek Street, near the Café Turk.

We both hurried up Greek Street, where about 40 of 50 foreigners were fighting and quarrelling, and commenced to disperse them. It was found necessary to arrest one of them who gave the name of William Mauder, a German, of 31, Thorn Street, Barnes, who was handed over to a constable who had then come up. Among the crowd who were still quarrelling was a man whom I now know to be Altfuldisch. I spoke to him, "Pass along." He was excited, and moved two yards. I then saw S.D. Inspector arrest him after he had requested him to go away. He then became violent, calling upon persons in the crowd to assist, used the words f——ing bulldog police. I assisted S.D. Inspector Mackay with him into Soho Square. He was still violent and clung to the railings, and both he and S.D. Inspector Mackay fell. I still held prisoner and assisted them up. He again caught the railings and continued calling to the crowd which was following.

When in Carlisle Street one of the men in the crowd attempted to rescue the prisoner, got in front of S.D. Inspector Mackay, and caught hold of his arm. He was also excited, and I then arrested him and went on in front of Altfuldisch. This prisoner gave the name of Theodore Ruppert. He was fined 20s. or 14 days for disorderly conduct and obstructing the inspector in the execution of his duty.

I saw Altfuldisch when he was brought to station. He was then very violent and shouting. I was then in the charge room with Ruppert, and there were two other charges waiting.

Altfuldisch was charged in his turn. He made no complaint of being assaulted, and neither did I see any assault committed. Upon reaching the station with the prisoner Ruppert, I saw Sergeant Crayfourd and P.C. Miles, and directed them to go along the street to S.D. Inspector Mackay's assistance.

The language alleged to have been used by the Inspector at Greek Street is entirely false.

Great Marlborough Street Station,

I beg to report that I was in charge of Great Marlborough Street Police Station on the morning of 17th

December, 1905, when Wilhelm Mauder, 31, Thorn Street, Barnes, a gardener, Theodore Ruppert, 72, Baker Street, Portman Square, a florist, and Ferdinand Altfuldisch, 17, Great Marlborough Street, were brought to this station, Mauder and Altfuldisch on a charge of being drunk and using obscene language at Greek Street, and Ruppert with being disorderly and obstructing S.D. Inspector Mackay in the execution of his duty at Dean Street.

The prisoners were shouting, behaving in a very violent manner, and were brought into the Station with great difficulty.

S.D. Inspector Mackay stated that he was dispersing a crowd of foreigners who were fighting in Greek Street, when Altfuldisch shouted, "We shan't go away for the f——g Police." On being requested to go away he refused, became very disorderly, and had to be arrested.

All the way to the Station he behaved very violent and was with difficulty restrained.

Ruppert also was with the crowd which was following the officers, attempted to rescue Altfuldisch from the custody of S.D. Inspector Mackay, and he was taken in custody by Inspector Manning.

On the charge being read over to Altfuldisch he made no reply, and did not complain of having been assaulted or subjected to violent treatment, neither did I see any assault committed.

I beg to report that at 12.30 a.m. on 17th December, 1905, I was in company with P.C. 79 "C" Allan Miles, standing near the doorway of Great Marlborough Street Station, previous to reporting off duty, when I saw Inspector Manning, with a man in custody, enter the station.

When passing me Inspector Manning directed me to go to the assistance of Sub-Divisional Inspector Mackay, who, he said, had a violent prisoner in custody at Poland Street.

Accompanied by P.C. Miles, I hurried in the direction indicated, and at the junction of Great Marlborough Street and Poland Street I met the S.D. Inspector with a man (whom I subsequently knew to be Ferdinand Altfuldisch), who was shouting and struggling violently. I assisted to take him to the station by taking him by the wrist and arm. P.C. Miles also assisted.

After much struggling the prisoner was eventually got to the station, and as there were other charges being taken he was placed in the waiting-room.

Whilst waiting there his violence continued, and he was restrained by P.C. Miles and myself.

After a period of about 10 minutes I was directed to take Altfuldisch to the charge-room, where he was charged. He was not assaulted by any officer, and the only force used was that used to convey the prisoner to the station, and restraining him from assaulting the police.

When charged he made no complaint of assault or abuse. The only words I heard used to him by the S.D. Inspector was a request to be sensible, cease his violence, and walk quietly to the station.

MRS. BRAHAM'S CASE.

Letter from Mr. J. Crabb, Hornsey Licence Watch Committee.

Private. 8th June, 1903.

To the Chief Commissioner Metropolitan Police.

Dear Sirs,—The enclosed* should have your attention. It seems a very serious case, not only against the P.C., but that the officer who took the complaint lodged by the lady was not produced.

I presume when these men are even upon their holiday they can be communicated with.

I think the magistrate also was seriously at fault in not granting a summons against the P.C. upon such evidence.

Yours truly,

I do not see how the case can be carried further without the recall of Inspector Billson from leave.

I do not consider that Crabb (well known for his extreme hostility to Police for many years) has any grounds for complaint, and suggest that no notice should be taken of his letter.

Clapham Station. W Division.
11th June, 1903.

With reference to attached, I beg to report that Insp. Billson, the officer who took the charge, is on annual leave, staying at 2, Beehive Cottages, Westgate-on-Sea, until 13th inst., after that at 43, River Row, Old Brompton, Chatham, and returns on 22nd inst.

On 6th inst., when the telegram was received from police court, a message was at once sent to his London address, and it was found that he had left by boat for Margate, therefore he could not have been produced.

Mrs. Braham was arrested at 12.15 a.m., 6th inst., and arrived at station ten minutes later, when she was charged with disorderly conduct. According to the two constables who brought her in—also the two on reserve duty—she made no complaint, but asked for a doctor to certify as to her sobriety, though not charged with being drunk.

Immediate steps were taken to procure bail, and it so happened that her husband (apparently not quite sober) was at Balham Station making inquiry respecting her when the telegraph message reached there, and, on receiving it, replied, "She has a beastly temper, and it would not take her long to set about anyone." Owing to the early delivery of message, she was not placed in cell and was bailed at 1.50 a.m.

At 2 a.m. Station Serg. Childs relieved Insp. Billson. Mr. and Mrs. Braham were then at station, and, although some conversation passed, nothing of the nature of a complaint against the P.C. was alluded to.

Shortly after 4 a.m I saw Insp. Billson, and he told me he had nothing outstanding or likely to arise during his absence. Had there been a complaint made, I ought to have then heard of it.

P.C. 800 Atkinson, who was married in 1889, and has a wife and two children, joined the Force, 18th July, 1892, and came to this division on 9th March last from "H."

Writer has what cannot be fairly termed less than a mania for reporting police; in fact, he boasts of the number he gets into trouble. He has done so to me about two years ago.

Although Mr. Braham intimated at the Police Court that he would complain to Commissioner, no complaint has yet reached us, therefore, in the absence of Insp. Billson, I venture to suggest that the matter be allowed to develop further.

(Signed) R. Hamilton.
S.D. Insp.

Submitted. No complaint has yet been received from Mr. or Mrs. Braham; possibly you will let the matter rest.

I do not see there is any occasion for the writer, Mr. Crabb, to intercede on their behalf.

Insp. Billson who was on duty at Clapham Station when Mrs. Braham was taken there in custody by P.C. 800W Atkinson, is away on annual leave until 22nd inst. A report from him will be obtained on his return as to what transpired at station. So far as I can ascertain at present, Mrs. Braham made no complaint there.

With reference to report called for re Mrs. Louisa Braham.

I beg to report that at 12.15 a.m. 6th June, 1903, I was on duty at South Lambeth Road when I saw a lady approaching towards me. On arriving up to me she stopped in front of me and said, "What are you interfering with me for?" I said, "I am not interfering with you," and moved aside and requested her to go on, when she complained that I had assaulted her. I told her that I had not done so, and requested her to go home, when she became very excited, started shouting, and would not go away, whereupon P.C. took her into custody. On the way to the station she asked me to let her go, saying she was sorry. When in Larkhall Lane, on seing P.C. 749W Allen she asked him to let her go.

I did not hear her make any complaint at the station, only that she wanted to see a doctor, when the Inspector said that it was not requisite, as she was not charged with being drunk.

I further beg to state that I did not interfere with or assault the lady in any way. I did not touch her until I took her into custody.

I beg to report that, shortly after midnight, the 6th inst., I was on duty in Larkhall Lane, when I saw P.C. 800 Atkinson bringing Braham towards the station. On Braham seeing me she said, "Let me go." I said, "You are in custody, and must go to the station." I then assisted P.C. 800 there with her.

At the station, in answer to the charge, she stated she had been to see some sick people in South Lambeth Road, and was late leaving there. She then asked to see a doctor to certify if she was drunk. The Inspector said it was not necessary, as she was not charged with that offence. She made no complaint in my hearing against P.C. 800 Atkinson.

During the short time which elapsed—probably about five or six minutes—between the time I first saw and the time of their leaving the station, I heard nothing whatever in the nature of a complaint against the police.

On the way to Clapham Police Station she said, "I am very sorry; will you let me go?" When asked by the Magistrate what she had to say, she stated that she had been to see some friends, and was waiting for a tramcar, when the constable took hold of her shoulders in a most offensive way, and pushed her. The Magistrate asked if she made any complaint at the police station. She said, "Yes, I did." He then put the case back till 3 p.m., for Inspector Billson, who took the charge, to attend. At 3 p.m. the Magistrate was informed that the Inspector had gone out of London on annual leave, and he discharged the prisoner. A man, who stated that he was the husband of prisoner, then asked the Magistrate for a summons against the P.C. for assault and perjury. The Magistrate said, "If you have any complaint to make, make it to the Commissioner," and he declined to grant a summons. The man stated he would do so. LETTER from Mr. BRAHAM.

"Llanberis," Culverden Road,
Balham, S.W.,
9th June, 1903.

The Chief Commissioner of Police,
New Scotland Yard.

SIR,—Herewith I beg to hand you report of a case heard before Mr. Shiel at the Westminster Police Court, Saturday last.

The facts are, shortly, these:—

My wife, who is tall and good looking, had left some friends' house in the South Lambeth-road shortly after 12 on the night of Friday, and was hurrying along to catch a car in order to meet me at Balham Station, when a constable suddenly stopped in front of her and placed his arm on her neck in a most offensive manner. She was naturally indignant, and demanded his number. He replied that she had evidently been drinking, and he should "lock her up." To which my wife replied, "You dare not." "Oh, daren't I," said the constable, and took her by the arm and into the road to the Larkhall Road Station at Clapham, calling the assistance of another constable on the way, although my wife accompanied him quietly. On the whole route the first constable was pinching her arm in a most rude manner.

Arrived at the Station, my wife was charged with "disorderly conduct" alone, and through the kindness of the Inspector in charge was allowed to sit in the waiting-room until I discovered her whereabouts, which I did accidentally by going to Cavendish Road Station, Clapham, with a view to getting the Inspector there to telegraph the various hospitals, as I feared my wife had met with some accident. It was then about two o'clock, when I signed the necessary recognisance and took my wife away in a cab to her home.

We were ordered to attend the police court at 10 o'clock the next morning, which we did. The magistrate arrived about 11, and our case came on about 11.30. The first constable, on oath, failed to establish any "disorderly conduct"; yet, in spite of my offering to produce witnesses to respectability, we were ordered to return at 3 o'clock. On our return the magistrate dismissed the charge, remarking, "There is nothing against her."

With the exception of this omission, and that my wife observed to the constable, "Let go my arm," and not "Let me go," the report is fairly accurate.

I was not aware until I read in the newspaper that the constable who preferred the charge had "gone for his holidays" between the hours of our two attendances.

I certainly cannot understand why, if such be correct, he was allowed to go away, and to my mind (and I make this remark under all reserves) it looks to me like a subversion of justice. I cannot understand the magistrate allowing an important witness to disappear. It must have been known he was going when we first attended, and why was the case not disposed of then? I suppose if we had not surrendered we should have been committed in our absence.

At the Clapham Station the Inspector had a private conversation with the charging constable, which seems to me very irregular.

On applying to the magistrate for a summons against the constable I was referred to you.

I shall therefore be obliged if you will be good enough to have a full enquiry made into the case, as it is intolerable that respectable people should be exposed to malicious prosecution on the part of the police.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Home Secretary, and am considering what further steps I shall take, as I certainly do not intend to allow the matter to rest.

My wife (who suffers from a weak heart), is most unwell from the effects of the arrest and indignity, and I myself am greatly upset, and am also afraid the case may seriously affect my business occupation.

I append a few (out of scores of references), and awaiting your reply,

Remain, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) PHILIP BRAHAM.

LADY AND POLICE.

SERIOUS ALLEGATIONS.

Mrs. Louisa Braham, 36, well-dressed, of Culverden Road, Balham, wife of a shipowner's managing clerk, was before Mr. Shiel at Westminster Police-court yesterday accused of behaving in a disorderly manner at South Lambeth Road.

Police-constable Atkinson, 800 W, deposed that at 12.15 a.m. the accused, proceeding along the pavement, stopped opposite to him. He moved on one side, and then she said, "Why do you interfere with me?" He replied, "You had better go along." Defendant thereupon alleged that he had assaulted her, became very excited, shouted, and refused to go. He took her into custody, and on the way to the station she said that she was sorry, and asked him to let her go. Police-constable 749 W stated that he saw the last witness bringing the accused along Larkhall Lane, Clapham. When she saw witness she asked him to let her go. She appeared as if she did not want to go to the station.

Defendant said the policeman's story was a fabrication. She had been to see some friends in South Lambeth Road, and remained with them somewhat later than she thought. She was making her way as quickly as she could to get a car home to Balham, when the policeman looked at her and took hold of her shoulder in a most offensive way. When she indignantly resented the insult, he said, "I'll show you." Then he locked her up.

Mr. Shiel: Did you complain to the Inspector?

Accused: Yes, I did.

The constable said she made no complaint.

Defendant's husband said he had been married 19 years, and his wife was the mother of three children. It was a fact that she went out to see some friends, and he was waiting to see her at Balham Station. He was willing and anxious to furnish references as to their respectability.

Mr. Shiel said he would put the case back until the late afternoon for the attendance of the Inspector who took the charge. On the re-appearance of the defendant it was stated that the officer who took the charge had earlier that very day gone on his holidays.

Mr. Shiel thereupon discharged the defendant. Her husband asked for a summons against the Constable 800 W, alleging perjury and assault. Mr. Shiel: "Go to the Commissioner of Police." The Husband: "I shall certainly do so."

LETTER FROM MR. BRAHAM TO THE HOME SECRETARY.

Llanberis,
Culverden Road, Balham.

The Right Hon. A. Akers Douglas,
His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department.
Home Office,
Whitehall, S.W.

Sir,—Herewith I beg to hand you a copy of a letter I have addressed to the Chief Commissioner of Police with respect to the wrongful arrest of my wife, and I shall be obliged if you will kindly have full inquiry made into the case.

I may say that, thanks to the publicity given to the matter by the Press, which clearly exonerates my wife in the eyes of the world, I have no desire to instigate any vindictive proceedings; but I most certainly demand that the constable in fault be suitably punished, and a public apology given to my wife.

Awaiting the honour of your reply, I beg to remain, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
P. BRAHAM.

Let Inspector Billson be immediately recalled, and further report submitted.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

SPECIAL REPORT.

Reference to Papers.

Brixton Station, W Division.

June 16th, 1903.

With reference to attached and Commissioner's minute thereon, I beg to report that Inspector Billson was wired to; he returned from Chatham, and his report is attached.

Mrs. Braham, with her husband, and the lady she had visited on night of 5th instant, attended here to-day (16th instant), and I took her statement in presence of the police concerned. There are variations in the statement to the letter of complaint.

I explained to Mr. Braham that it was the Inspector who took the charge, that had gone on leave, and not the police constable preferring the charges, as stated in his letter.

Mr. Braham said the only thing he wanted to know was whether it was suggested by police that his wife was soliciting. I told him, no; there was no such imputation or suggestion.

Miss Marion Young, the lady friend where Mrs. Braham had been visiting, only knows that she left about twelve midnight, after paying a visit to her; she knows nothing more.

Inspector Billson's explanation as to the private conversation detailed in letter is that P.C. Atkinson had at that time stated the charge he had preferred, in the presence of the accused, and he went purposely from the charge room into the Inspector's office—out of the woman's hearing—to tell the P.C. she was not drunk, and he should not entertain that part of the charge. Also asked the P.C. whether when he crossed the roadway, did he think the woman was a prostitute.

As to the charge itself, there is no corroboration; it is the word of Mrs. Braham against the P.C. The man both speak of neither know, so he cannot be found and his version taken of what occurred.

It is a pity that Inspector Billson did not attend the Police Court at the hearing of the charge.

Mr. and Mrs. Braham wish to say that she received every kindness when at the police station.

Mr. Braham has not decided upon his subsequent action in this matter; it is in the hands of his solicitor, and he shall act on his advice.

J. TAYLOR, Acting Superintendent.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Clapham Station. W Division.

16th June, 1903.

With reference to reports called for re charges against Louise Braham, I beg to report that at 12.25 a.m., 6th instant, Louise Braham, of 7, Culverden Road, Balham, was brought to the station by P.C.'s 800 W Atkinson and 749 W Allen on a charge of being drunk and disorderly at South Lambeth Road.

P.C. 800 W stated that he saw the woman deliberately stop a man (evidently a stranger), who was proceeding in an opposite direction, but the man stepped aside without holding conversation with her.

On P.C. crossing the street the woman came towards him, stopped in front of him, and said, "What are you looking at, and why are you interfering with me?"

The P.C. informed her that he was not interfering with her, and requested her to go home, when she became very excited, and shouted that she would take his number for assaulting her. As she continued shouting, and refused to go away, although being several times requested to do so by the P.C., he took her into custody, being assisted by P.C. 749 W Allen from Larkhall Lane to the station. The latter P.C. was not a witness of the disorderly behaviour, but both stated that the woman requested them to let her go, as she was sorry.

When at the station the woman was rather excited, but I considered that she was not drunk, and told the

P.C. so, who informed me that he thought she was drunk because she smelt strongly of liquor.

I failed to observe any signs of drunkenness, and as the evidence of the P.C. clearly showed that she had been guilty of disorderly behaviour, I entered it on the charge sheet as such.

Mrs. Braham stated that she had been visiting friends, and whilst on her way home the P.C. (800 W) roughly pushed by her. Resenting such conduct, she asked him why he had assaulted her in that manner, and that he had replied, "You have been drinking, and I shall take you to the station."

Mrs. Braham denied having stopped a man, but stated that several men had looked at her as she passed, which she considered very offensive.

On being charged, she asked that a doctor might be sent for. I informed her that if she felt ill I would send for one, when she replied, "No, I am not ill, but he could tell that I am not drunk." I informed her that she was not charged with being drunk, so it would be unnecessary to call a doctor for that purpose.

She then requested that her husband be sent for.

A telegram was sent, and her husband, Philip Braham, of same address, attended at 1.50 a.m. and became surety for her appearance at Westminster Police Court same date.

No other complaint was made by Mrs. Braham against police whilst at the station; she had opportunity for doing so had she wished, as she was allowed to occupy a seat in the charge room during her detention at the station, and was not placed in a cell.

Statement made by Louisa Braham, 7, Culverdon Road, Balham.

At about 12 night, 5th instant, I left my friends, 4, Victoria House, South Lambeth Road. The daughter, Miss Marion Young, accompanied me to Tate's Library, South Lambeth Road. She left me there. I hurried along to catch the tramcar at Stockwell to Balham. I had passed all the shops where the lights were on, and there were only houses on either side, when the constable seemed to dart out from a gateway (P.C. 800 W). There was a man there. He seemed to come on the scene at almost the same time that P.C. 800 W did. I appealed to the man, saying, "You see I have not done anything. Will you come to the police station with me?" He did not answer me. The constable then took hold of my shoulder, and I looked at him and asked his number. He refused his number, and again took hold of my shoulder. I was indignant, and said, "How dare you?" He told me he would show me what he dare do, and took me to the police station. He held my arm the whole of the way. I asked him to let my arm go, but he did not. On the way to the station he called another constable. I don't know what he said—I think it was "Come here." That P.C. (749 W) took my right arm. Then we arrived at the station. I then complained to the Inspector there. That complaint was exactly the words you have written down here.

(Signed) Louise Braham.

Question by P.C. 800: You say I seemed to dart out of a gateway?

Answer: Yes.

Q.: Did you stop about 40 yards away and stop in front of a man?

A.: No, certainly not.

Q.: Did you stop in front of me when you came up to me?

A.: Certainly not. No.

Q.: Did you ask me what I was interfering with you for?

A.: No.

Q.: Did I not say, "I am not interfering with you," and requested you to go on, and I moved into the church gateway?

A.: No, and you did not move.

Q.: As I went to go into the gateway did you not say, "What are you assaulting me for?"

A.: I did not say such a word.

Q.: Did I not ask a man if I had interfered or assaulted you in any way?

A.: No, you did not.

Letter from Mr. Braham.

Llanberis,

18th June, 1903.

The Chief Commissioner of Police,
Metropolitan Police Office,
New Scotland Yard, S.W.
Your reference No. 392626/2.

Sir,—With further reference to my letter of the 9th instant, my wife received a visit on the 16th from an official whom we understood represented both yourself and the Home Office, and he expressed his regrets at the occurrence, requesting our attendance the same evening at the Brixton Station.

We accordingly attended at that station, when we were confronted with the constable and the various police officers interested in the case, and both my wife's and the officers' evidence was taken by the official in charge.

This evidence was practically the same as was given before the Magistrate, and the constable again failed to establish any charge whatever against my wife.

I have seen my solicitor, and whilst I am perfectly satisfied as to our legal position in the matter, I would gladly (taking into consideration the publicity given to the case by the public press, which clearly exonerates my wife from any imputation against her character) avoid the necessity of taking proceedings against the constable in fault.

I shall be glad therefore to hear from you what steps you propose to take in the matter to protect the public against any repetition of such annoyance in the future, which is my sole object in pursuing the matter further. Please understand that we have no cause for complaint against the police force in general.

Owing, however, to the anxiety and worry my wife has suffered, I find it necessary to take her abroad for a while, and I shall be glad therefore to have your reply before we leave within the next few days.

I take it you have no objection to my publishing this letter and your reply in the press.

Awaiting the honour of your reply,

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

Reply on these lines to Mr. Braham, and let me see draft. Some inquiry as to Inspector Billson's absence on leave with such an obviously troublesome case pending. It might be well if the attention of the Divisions were called to the necessity of special attention being given to such cases. Whenever an apparently respectable woman of the middle or better class is brought to the station and charged with being drunk or being disorderly, or both, the Superintendent or Chief Inspector should be consulted before summons is taken out, and when application is made for summons a brief report should accompany.

Draft letter to H.O. to effect that I have recently received a further letter from Mr. Braham, copy of which I attach, and to which I have sent the following reply:—

These cases present great difficulties always, as there is ordinarily only the testimony of the constable against the statement of the person arrested. If the Inspector who took the charge had been present in Court, the Magistrate might have found a different order. The Inspector is being called to account for having absented himself while so troublesome a case was pending.

A. C. A. (Major Wodehouse).

Submitted. As directed I have seen Inspector Billson and P.C. Atkinson. I am of opinion that the latter made a great mistake in arresting Mrs. Braham, and acted too hastily. If he had walked away there is no doubt Mrs. Braham would have gone home. Secondly, Inspector Billson made an error of judgment in taking the charge. Finding that Mrs. Braham was sober (although the P.C. charged her with being drunk), he ought to have been doubly careful, and the charge should not have been taken. Inspector Billson ought to have attended the police-court and not gone on leave till the case had been disposed of; he is a good officer, but in this case showed a want of discretion, and too readily accepted the evidence of P.C. Atkinson.

(Signed) W. E. G. (Major Gilbert).
30/6/03.

Inspector Billson clearly failed to use proper discretion in dealing with the charge, and showed negligence in not attending the Court. He will be strictly cautioned. The P.C. may in the first instance have been guilty of an error of judgment only, but his subsequent action in preferring a charge of drunkenness against a sober person looks as though he sought to make the case stronger. He will also be strictly cautioned. Mr. Henry to see.

Re Case of Mrs. Braham.

New Scotland Yard,
23rd June, 1903.

Sir,—With reference to your letter of the 9th and 18th instant, I am directed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to acquaint you that he has previously made every possibly enquiry, which has, however, failed to throw any fresh light upon the case.

It is unfortunate that the Inspector who took the charge, and whose testimony the Magistrate required, should have absented himself on leave instead of being present in Court when the case was called on for hearing. In view of the Magistrate's decision in the case, the Commissioner feels it incumbent on him to express his regret for any inconvenience that may have been caused to you or Mrs. Braham by police action.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) Lewis J. Fry,
Acting Chief Clerk.

P. Braham, Esq.

392626/3. New Scotland Yard, S.W.,
25th June, 1903.

Sir,—Referring to the Home Office papers No. 108934, returned herewith, on the subject of the arrest of Mrs. Braham for disorderly conduct, I have the honour to transmit for the information of the Secretary of State the enclosed copy of a report made by the Inspector who took the charge, detailing the whole of the circumstances of the case.

I also enclose a copy of a further letter, dated 18th instant, which I have received from Mr. Braham, and a copy of the reply which has been sent to both of his communications.

Cases of this kind, in which women who prove to be more or less respectable are brought to police stations charged with drunkenness, disorderly conduct, etc., always present difficulties, as there is ordinarily only the testimony of the police constable against that of the person charged.

It will be observed from the newspaper report, which is substantially accurate, that when informed that the Inspector who took the charge had gone away on his holidays the Magistrate discharged Mrs. Braham, and did not apparently adjudicate upon the case on its merits, as he probably would have done.

This circumstance created an additional source of embarrassment to me, to whom Mr. Braham was referred by the Magistrate, although I have no power to take evidence upon oath.

I have only to add that the Inspector was recalled immediately on the receipt of the complaint of Mr. Braham; and he will be suitably dealt with for absenting himself while so obviously troublesome a case in which he was concerned was pending.

I am, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,

Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of 23rd inst., and am perfectly willing to accept the apology offered to my wife and myself, and I feel sure I can now safely leave the matter in the Chief Commissioner's hands to deal suitably with the constable at fault.

ANDREWS' CASE.

COPY of NOTES OF EVIDENCE taken at Old Street Police Court, on 30th July, 1906, before A. R. CLUER, ESQ., in the Case of Police v. WILLIAM ANDREWS, disorderly and assaulting P.C.

WILLIAM ANDREWS.

FRANK DAWSON, 371 G, sworn, saith:—

At 12.15 a.m. I was in Luke Street and saw prisoner fighting. I went and got him away. He rushed at a woman and hit her in the mouth. I arrested him. He hit me in the mouth and was violent. At the station he said he was very sorry, but would not be hit for nothing.

B.O.

In the Case of
v.
WILLIAM MANNING, P.C. 226G.

WILLIAM MANNING, P.C. 226G.

WILLIAM ANDREWS, sworn.

I live at No. 37, Granville Buildings, Luke Street, and am a french polisher.

On 29th July last, at ten minutes past 12 at night, I was arrested in Luke Street. I passed some drunken persons, and caught one by accident on the shoulder. He struck at me, and I struck at him back. A police-constable caught hold of me, and another police-constable that knew me came up, and I was taken to the station and charged with assaulting a police-constable (the second police-constable that came up). On the 30th July I was brought up at this court, and I was bound over.

On the 29th I was taken to the station. The sergeant said, "Downstairs with him." I was taken downstairs by several constables. Defendant was one of them. I was taken down into a place like a basement. I was not put into a cell. I was taken down for the object of being assaulted. I had not asked to be taken down. After I was assaulted the sergeant called out, "Bring him up." It was very dark. I should think it was about 50 yards long. A door would be in the left-hand corner standing with my back to the stairs.

All the police officers closed round me and kicked and pummelled me. Quite a dozen were there. Defendant struck and kicked me. It was he who cut my eye with a blow. I fell against the wall two or three times. I think the defendant must have had a ring on his finger.

I had no mark on me when I went into the station. As I was taken in a police-constable was there in plain clothes, and he said, "Got him at last." He kicked me on the way down, and most of my injuries came from him.

I have complained of the police. I have been convicted; the last time was two years ago. Since then I have worked when I could. My eye was bleeding when I was brought up. I did not complain then; I was dazed. When I was bailed, I said to the sergeant, "You coward, to tell them to serve me like this." He said I had got the mark when I was brought in. I had the cut stitched up at the hospital. In the basement I was sitting on a wooden seat—I think it was—and I was dazed. Then the defendant came and hit at me from under, and gave me the cut on the eye. The defendant then said he would do the f——g same for my brother on Monday.

There were two young fellows at the station being charged.

Cross-examined.

There are a good many convictions against me.

I have had five years' penal servitude, in 1898, for shop-breaking. In 1904 I had a month for attempting to obtain money by false pretences. In 1903 I was sentenced for being a suspected person. In 1897 I had six months for housebreaking. In 1896 I was sentenced for stealing butter. I have been in an industrial school. I have not been convicted of assault. I have been fined for indecency in the streets.

On 1st August, Wednesday, I went to the police-station and asked for a parade of the constables, and I picked the defendant out.

I said at the station I could not pick the constables out who had assaulted me. I said I could not recognise the "other" constables. I said Manning had assaulted me. I believe that was on Wednesday, 1st August.

I am certain defendant was on the steps when I was taken into the station at about half-past 12. He followed me downstairs. I was not violent in the station, nor on the way to the station.

My face was not marked when I went into the station.

A woman threw a can at me, but it missed me.

The sergeant did not ask me how I came by the injuries I had. There was no reason for taking me downstairs except to assault me.

I had to wait for the money before applying for the summons. I have been doing badly lately.

I was bound over before Mr. Cluer.

I had a handkerchief to my head when I was brought upstairs.

Re-examined.

No doctor was sent for at the station. I made inquiries after 30th July.

I made the statement about being assaulted to Mr. Cluer.

The police had not said then that I had any cuts when I came into the station. I had hospital bandages on me when I was brought up. When the sergeant said "Take him downstairs," I thought they were going to assault me.

THOMAS BELTCHER, sworn.

I am an engineer, and I live at No. 5, Darcy Buildings, London Fields.

On the night of the 28th July I was in Luke Street. A man seemed to challenge Andrews to fight. He made two attempts to strike Andrews, and Andrews seemed to strike at him.

A woman threw some beer over Andrews, and seemed to try to throw a can at him. A police-constable caught Andrews by the left arm and another officer caught him afterwards by the right arm. He did not seem to be resisting.

I do not know the prosecutor at all. It was fairly light.

He had no marks on his face then. I thought they handled him very severely.

The second police-constable was relieved by another one on the way to the station.

The second police-constable was an elderly man.

The first P.C. twisted Andrews' arm on the way to the station.

I saw the police-constables close round him as he was taken into the station. I remained outside. I had offered to become bail myself. I waited until the bail came. I saw the complainant come out of the station with his handkerchief up to his face. It was saturated with blood, and he complained. It was fresh blood. His right eye was practically closed, and there was a cut above the right eye. His collar was crumpled up, and his waistcoat undone, and he looked as if he had been in a good "scrimmage."

His face was quite normal when he went to the station.

When he came out he was taken to the hospital.

Cross-examined.

His face was not bleeding when he came out of the station.

Re-examined.

There was no suggestion before Mr. Cluer that I incited the prisoner to resist the police.

CHARLES GEORGE SPARKS, sworn.

I am a showcase maker, and live at No. 58, Gravel Buildings, Luke Street, Hoxton.

I was outside the buildings, and saw Andrews opposite. I did not know him.

Some people passed, and a man swore at Andrews, and struck at him twice. Andrews struck at him.

A woman came up, and threw some beer over Andrews. She tried to hit him with a can.

A police-constable came up, and claimed Andrews.

Then another P.C. came and took him. He had no mark on his face then.

LOUISA SPARKS, sworn.

I am the wife of the last witness. I saw Andrews taken to the police station by the P.C.'s. There were no marks on his face then.

SIDNEY GIBBS, sworn.

I am a printer, and live at No. 17, Carter's Terrace, St. John's Road, Hoxton. I saw the two P.C.'s holding Andrews. One was an older P.C. than the other. Andrews had no mark on his face then.

ELLEN GIBBS, sworn.

I am the wife of the last witness. I saw Andrews in custody. His face had no marks on it then. He was saturated with beer.

ELIZA LEWIS, sworn.

I am married, and I live at No. 40, Granville Buildings, Luke Street. I saw Andrews taken into custody in Luke Street by two P.C.'s, one on each side. He was not disfigured in any way.

(Adjourned to 28th August.)

COPY OF NOTES OF EVIDENCE taken before H. C. BIRON, Esq., one of the Magistrates of the Police Courts of the Metropolis, sitting at Old Street Police Court, on Tuesday, the 28th day of August, 1906.

In the case of

v.

P.C. 226 MANNING, G Division.

WILLIAM MANNING, P.C. 226, G Division

MARGARET ELIZABETH BASSETT, sworn.

I live at No. 44, Harwar Street, Hackney Road.

I went to bail my son (Bassett) at 3 a.m. on the 29th of July. I saw Andrews being bailed. His face was swollen. I think on his right side. I did not notice anything else.

He told the sergeant (question objected to). He told the sergeant something.

I did not see the defendant. I saw two sergeants and one P.C.

Andrews was brought from a door on the ground floor. He was brought in by a police-constable. His face was swollen a bit.

By the Magistrate.

I did not notice Andrews' eye. He had a blood-stained handkerchief. My sight is bad.

Further examined.

I have not spoken to a police-constable since the last hearing on this subject.

GEORGE OLNEY, sworn.

I live at No. 55, Brunswick Street.

I was taken to Old Street Police Station. I was discharged the next day. I saw Andrews there. He was brought in by three P.C.'s, I think, in uniform, and there were others in plain clothes. I did not see the defendant there. There were other P.C.'s in the station. It was about 20 past 12, early morning.

The sergeant entering the charge made an observation, and Andrews was taken out of a door, and I afterwards heard him howling and groaning like a dog. The door was shut. He might have been groaning three or four minutes, and I was then taken away. His face was like an ordinary man's face when he was taken away. There were no marks as I noticed.

I looked at his face. I saw him again on the Monday morning, and one eye was swollen, and had strapping on it. The strapping was on his eyebrow.

Cross-examined.

I had not been charged before.

I could not see where Andrews was taken to. As far as I know he might have been outside the door all the time. He was quiet when he was brought in. He was not violent or noisy. I particularly noticed his face. I saw him when he was charged. He had not got a cut over his right eye. I looked straight at him to see if he had been knocked about. The way they had trodden on my heels made one think they might do the same to some one else.

The sergeant might have said, "Take him outside."

By Magistrate.

He was groaning and shouting like a man who was being knocked about.

Further examined.

It sounded as if it was downstairs.

FRANCIS BASSETT, sworn.

I am an engineer's assistant, and live at No. 44, Harwar Street.

I was brought to the station with Olney about 20 past 12. I was discharged the next day. I saw Andrews brought in by several P.C.'s.

I heard the sergeant say something.

He said something about "below," or words to that effect. I think he said, "Take him down below."

Andrews was then removed. He was taken out of a centre door on the left of the station. It did not say "Cells" on the door. Two other doors had "Cells" on. I heard shouts and hollers afterwards—screaming and shouting as if someone was in agony.

I had not seen Andrews before.

He had no marks on his face.

The next morning, in court, I saw that his face was in bandages.

Cross-examined.

It was not the first time that I had been arrested. I noticed Andrews' face. I could not say that he had not got a cut over his eye. He was not violent. I did not notice any violence. He was a quiet prisoner. There was a good deal of noise; not when Andrews was brought in.

I spoke up sharp to a constable afterwards. A man was in custody when I was brought in. He was charged before I was. I don't recognise defendant as being there.

Re-examined.

I looked at his face. I saw no blood on it. I was close to him. I should have noticed any blood if there had been any. I know defendant by sight. I knew him before this time. I should have known him if I had seen him there. I should have seen him if he had been there.

About ten or twelve constables were there. I was there about half an hour.

REUBEN HUGHES, sworn.

I am a printer, and live at No. 9, Granville Buildings.

On 29th July I saw Andrews in the custody of two police officers. They took him along to Old Street Police Station.

He did not struggle. His arms and hands were behind him.

I was on the kerb under the electric light when he was brought in, and I saw him quite well.

There were no marks on his face.

I saw two police officers on the station steps—one in uniform and one in plain clothes. I don't recognise the defendant.

Cross-examined.

I will swear that Andrews had not a cut over the right eye.

I saw an appeal for witnesses in the "Star."

FREDERICK JAMES LANG, sworn.

I live at No. 38, Granville Buildings, and I am an engineer's assistant.

About 12.15 a.m., 29th July, I saw Andrews. Two police officers were taking him. He did not resist. A crowd followed.

I saw a gentleman at the top of the station steps. Andrews had no marks on his face then.

I saw him when he was bailed.

He had a swollen face, a cut over the eye, and a bump on the back of his head. He had a handkerchief over his eye.

Cross-examined.

I saw his face when he was taken in. I was first seen about this case on the 30th July by Mr. Andrews. I was not here last time this case was heard.

He had been ill-treated on the way to the station. His arms were twisted. I saw Mr. Smith after Andrews was taken in.

He went to get bail, and I went with him. Andrews lives in the same buildings as I do.

Re-examined.

I sent to the court on the last occasion to say why I did not come. I have nothing to do with Andrews.

BAZETTE BUTCHER, sworn.

I am house surgeon at St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

A man named Andrews was brought to the Hospital on the early morning of 29th July.

He had a cut on the right side of the head. I cannot say more than that. I do not remember the case particularly. I cannot say if I saw him or not. The dresser attended to him. (Examines Andrews' head in Court.) The cut might have been caused by a sharp instrument or a blunt instrument. Not, I should say, from a fist. I should not think a great deal of force was used to cause it.

Cross-examined.

If it had been anything serious the dresser should have called me. I should not think the cut was caused by a ring on the finger.

JAMES ALBERT SMITH, sworn.

I live at No. 37, Granville Buildings.

I am the son of Andrews' employer.

I tried to get bail for Andrews.

I saw him brought from the cells.

He held his handkerchief to his eye, and his face was swollen.

He had blood on his hands, also on his handkerchief.

He said something to the sergeant. I spoke to Andrews, and left with him. We went home, and afterwards to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

SUSAN WYFFIE, sworn.

I am married, and I live at No. 101, Langbourne Buildings.

About 12 midnight I saw a can of beer thrown over Andrews. The can never touched him. He had no marks on his face. The can caught the window.

Cross-examined.

The beer went all over him.

(Adjourned to 4th September, 1906, at 12 noon.)

COPY OF NOTES taken at the Old Street Police Court, before H. C. BIRON, Esq., on 12th September, 1906, in the case of ANDREWS v. MANNING. Assault.

WILLIAM ANDREWS (recalled by Magistrate), on oath saith:—

I knew Manning by sight well. I thought the seat on which I was struck was let in the wall. Something like the bench at the back of the witness box. I should say it went straight along the wall.

ANNIE WEBSTER, married, of 23, Granville Buildings, sworn.

On a Saturday in July I was coming from Hoxton with a bag and a can of beer. There was a disturbance, and my husband spoke to Andrews, who went to give my husband a punch, and he (Andrews) knocked the beer out of the can, and made my nose bleed with his fist. Some of the beer went over Andrews, and some went over me and my husband. He meant the blow, I think, for my husband. I am sure the can didn't strike Andrews. The police have been to see me since I was subpœnaed.

Cross-examined.

I told the P.C. who came that I didn't know anything about the beer throwing. He suggested that I was the woman who threw the can. I didn't say I knew nothing about the incident. The blow caused the beer to spill.

DEFENCE.

WILLIAM MANNING, P.C. 226 G, sworn, saith:—

On 28th July I was relieved from duty at 5 past 9 p.m. At 9 I returned to the station, had supper, changed my clothes, and went out for a walk with P.C. Percival. I did shopping, and returned to the station, where I sleep, at half-past 11. I went in the station by the yard door, and then went in the mess room on ground floor, and went to the brushing room, and to bed. P.C. Lane came upstairs. I went to bed about 5 to 12. Lane left me at the dormitory door. I shouted out to Lane as I was undressing. About 12.5 I was in bed, when the sergeant called the roll, about quarter-past 12. I didn't come down again that night. I didn't dress again. I came down next at 10 a.m. on 29th. I should not be allowed to go down and go out after the roll was called. P.C. Fraser came up to the brushing room while I was there. I spoke to P.C. Lynch after I was in bed. Sergeant Robertson called the roll. I didn't see Andrews that night. I wasn't in the part of the station where prisoners are after 9 p.m. that night. I heard Andrews was arrested next morning. I have never assaulted Andrews. I have never worn a ring. I haven't got a ring.

I have never had Andrews in custody. He is known as a good thief. He is known as "Skinner."

Cross-examined.

A man named Smith told me he had given Andrews employment. I don't know if that was so.

The roll call is at 12. I have never gone downstairs after the roll has been called. A man could go to the lavatory if necessary. I haven't seen Bassett since he was here. I have known Andrews some time. I know his brother and his associates. I know his brother as a loafer.

The sergeant who calls the roll goes in all the cubicles and sees if the men are there. I can't say if he came in my cubicle on this occasion. Each cubicle is separate and private, and has a door to itself. I had shut my door on this occasion. I asked Lynch to turn the light out. He was going to bed. There is one light between two cubicles. We have talked about this matter amongst ourselves. I haven't talked about Mrs. Webster to Fraser or Lynch.

I didn't see or hear the sergeant push the door open on this occasion. The door was on the catch. I heard the sergeant's footsteps in the corridor.

The sergeant doesn't call out when he calls the roll. I didn't see him in my cubicle that night.

Re-examined.

The partitions go up to within about 2 feet of the ceiling. The sergeant goes round with a list, sees if the men are in bed, and marks them off. My hours of duty were 9 to 1 a.m. and 5 to 9 p.m.

ALFRED PERCIVAL, P.C. 439 G, sworn, saith :—

On 28th July I was off duty at 6 p.m. I saw Manning in the station about 9.30. We went for a walk in plain clothes and returned about half-past eleven. We went in the yard door and in the station mess.

We met Lane and Lynch there, and had refreshment. I went up to the brushing-room with Manning and Lynch. We changed our boots for slippers. Manning went upstairs. I didn't see him again that night.

I went in the mess kitchen, and afterwards to bed. I remember the roll being called.

Cross-examined.

Roll is called at 12. I was undressing when roll was called that night.

I have never known anyone to go down to go out after the roll was called. The men's kitchen is on the 2nd floor. When we were out Manning went to buy a hat.

The sergeant who calls the roll looks in each bunk. Manning's cubicle is some distance from mine. I could not see if the sergeant went there or not.

Re-examined.

I made a report two or three days after of my doings on that night. We have to be in by twelve at night.

JOHN FRASER, 13 GR, sworn, saith :—

On 28th July I came to the station about 11.30 p.m. from the Britannia Theatre, where I had been on special duty. I reported "off duty" and went upstairs to the brushing-room and took off my uniform. I saw Lynch and Manning. Manning was changing his boots. I went then to the station mess and afterwards to bed at 12 o'clock. Manning went upstairs when I came down. I was undressing when the roll was called.

Cross-examined.

The roll is on a card. My cubicle is not near Manning's.

I saw Bassett being lead up Kingsland Road, drunk, one day last week. He hadn't been to our mess on that occasion. A man was leading him. I didn't tell Bassett I would have him again if he made it too hot for the police.

I treated him once to a drink at the mess—not since these proceedings began. It was before the 29th July. I am certain of that. I have known Bassett a long time. I am sure he hasn't been with me in the mess since 29th July. He was only there once with me. We can go to bed when we like, but mustn't stay up after twelve.

No one goes downstairs after the roll is called. It is possible for any one to go out and come back again. The sergeant always comes to see if I am in the cubicle. I have known Andrews some years. I have never seen him with Manning.

I haven't spoken to the witnesses since the proceedings began.

JAMES ROBERTSON, P.S. 22 G, sworn, saith :—

On 28th July I had to call the section house roll. I began doing so at 12 o'clock. I should reach Manning's cubicle about 10 past 12. I saw Manning in bed then. His cubicle number is 8. I have to report downstairs the roll call correct or otherwise.

It is entered in the occurrence book. The board produced is the one on which I called the roll that night. If the men are in bed and asleep we look in the cubicle and see that the men are there. The form produced shows Manning's tours of duty that day—9 to 1, 5 to 9.

It would be a breach of duty for a P.C. to come downstairs and knock about after he had gone to bed.

Cross-examined.

The board is used every night. It is rubbed out every week. It is only for guidance for the sergeants.

In the ordinary course it would have been cleaned on the Monday.

I am sure Manning was in bed that night. I marked him on the board.

I looked in his cubicle.

I extinguished the light at Manning's cubicle.

I extinguish any lights that are burning.

I don't remember if the light was burning at this particular cubicle.

I have a lantern, and always use it to look at the men. I look at their faces.

All who should have been in bed were in bed.

I looked in every cubicle.

I look at all their faces.

I report to the officer on duty.

Re-examined.

I was called on to report on this two or three days after 29th July.

HARRY LANE, P.C. 379 G, sworn.

On 28th July I finished duty at 6. I went out, and returned about 11.30 or 20 to 12.

I went in the mess and saw Manning and Percival, and we had

Cross-examined.

Percival stopped downstairs when we went up. I was on leave on 29th. I was not going out with Manning. Manning has spoken to me many times.

There was nothing very special to call my attention to this occasion. I haven't seen Bassett in the canteen.

No one has spoken to me as to the evidence given this morning. I haven't heard of any constable going downstairs after he has been to bed.

I was in bed when Sergeant Robinson called the roll.

There is a light over my cubicle. The sergeant would turn it out. Anyone else could turn it out.

Re-examined.

I get one Sunday in a month and one week-day.

DAVID LYNCH, P.C. 91 G, sworn, saith :—

On 28th July I came off duty at 11.30. I went to the brushing room, afterwards to the mess kitchen and had supper.

Defendant sleeps next to me, and he asked me to put out the light. I asked him to wait, as the sergeant hadn't finished calling the roll. The sergeant afterwards extinguished the light.

I have no doubt that was the night. I reported about it a day or two afterwards. (Report produced.)

Cross examined.

I was asked to report.

I was told Manning was accused of assaulting someone, and I was called upon to report, when I wrote the report straight off on to the paper.

GEORGE ALLISON, Inspector G, sworn, saith :—

The "Sergeant's State" produced shows 226 G was (objected to).

The document purports to show that 226 G was on leave on 29th July, also that 379 G was on leave that day.

The sheet produced purports to show that defendant was on duty from 9 to 1 and from 5 to 9, 28th July, 31st July, 10 past noon, complainant came and asked for the number of the constable who was in plain clothes. When he was brought in he said he knew him as "Charley Wood." I asked why he wanted his number. He said, "That was the man who was on the station steps when I was brought in. He struck me. The ring he was wearing cut me over the eye. He then punched me at the back of the neck. That was what led up to the disturbance in the charge room."

I said, "Which steps?'

He said, "Those out there" (steps outside), and pointed to them. I understood he was suggesting he was assaulted before going in the charge room. He said he didn't know who the man was, only as Charley Wood. He would not know any of the others, because there were 12 or 14 of them. He said, "I should know him again" (referring to Wood). I said, "We haven't a man of that name; but as you say you would know him again, I will arrange for the men who were off duty in plain clothes to be at the station, and you will have an opportunity of identifying him." I arranged for 3.30 that afternoon, and he came. I was not there then. I have no doubt as to the steps he meant. He pointed through the glass in the door to them.

Cross-examined.

He told me they were steps leading to the station. He never said anything about underground steps or passage. There is no reason for taking anyone into the basement. Andrews would have no business there.

I have learned since that Manning is known as "Charley Wood," because he refers to his truncheon as that.

I wrote a report within five minutes of the time (produced).

There are steps at the back of the station leading to a basement. No prisoner should be taken down there.

Andrews should be able to identify the other constables. I went off duty about a quarter to 3, and left instructions.

Mr. Holland, Station Sergeant, sworn.

I was on duty on 28th July. I came on at 10 p.m., and was on duty till 2 a.m. I took charges. A man was brought in on a charge of burglary soon after 12. Obony and Bassett were brought in for disorderly conduct. Andrews was charged about 12.35. Two officers brought in Obony and Bassett. Two men brought in Andrews. Two men were assisting me. Defendant was not there. I didn't see him at the station after I came on duty.

Andrews was very violent—tried to break away and to throw the officers. He came in after Obony and Bassett. I was finishing the charge of burglary.

In consequence of Andrews' violence I called to him to stop, and he would not. I said, "Take him outside on to the landing until I'm ready for him."

I could not go on with the work, as they were struggling.

I saw the right side of Andrews' face was slightly cut and bleeding.

That night Sergeant Robertson reported to me as to calling the roll, and I made entry in the Occurrence Book (produced). I also entered report of Andrews' arrest.

Cross-examined.

Andrews was very violent and there was a noise. He had a cut on a line with the eye on the right side. I think 371 G and P.C. Peck brought Andrews in.

Andrews didn't, after he had been taken outside, call my attention to his face. The mark was too slight to call a doctor.

When he was brought in from the landing the blood had dried up.

There are seats round in the basement. There is a door in the corner. I heard a noise on the landing from the time Andrews was taken outside until he was brought in again.

I have heard of Charley Wood, but did not know it referred to Manning.

Alfred Payne, 420 G, sworn, saith:—

I was on reserve duty on the night of 28th. I went on at 10 p.m. until 6 a.m. I was about all the time. Defendant was not there. I saw Andrews brought in. He was violent and shouting. He was bleeding from a wound on the right eye when he was brought in. I saw him taken outside on to the landing. One or two other officers were about.

I heard no noise after he was taken out. It was just outside the door. I heard no howls from the basement. I didn't see Andrews brought in again. I was out when Andrews was bailed.

Charles Herwin, 335 G, sworn.

I was at the station on the night of 28th July. I saw Andrews brought in. I went off at 6 a.m. I didn't see Manning there. I went on at 10 p.m.

Cross-examined.

Andrews had a cut over the right eye. He had a drop or two of blood on it. I saw Andrews bailed. He used abusive language to the sergeant—Sergeant Roberts. He said, "It's no use speaking to the f——g sergeant."

I didn't hear him complain of being knocked about and beaten. I saw no bruises about his face. He was violent and sergeant told them to take him out on the landing. I made a report a few days after.

Frederick Dawson, 371 G, sworn.

On 28th July, I arrested Andrews about 12.15 a.m. P.C.'s Stephens and Peck helped me take him to the station. He had a slight cut over the right eye. I saw him fighting at first with a man and woman. He rushed at the woman and she struck him on the face with a beer can, and the beer went over him. I arrested him first. At the station he abused the police and resisted us. The sergeant told us to take him outside. I didn't see the defendant there. I should have seen him if he had been.

Cross-examined.

He still abused us outside. He wanted us to leave go of his arms, and we did not. We were just outside the charge-room door. They could have heard him inside. We only took him on the landing. There was a cut on his forehead when he was arrested. His handkerchief had blood on it. It was only a slight cut.

I have never seen Bassett in the canteen.

William Peck, 245 G, sworn.

On 29th July I assisted Dawson to take Andrews. He was violent. Manning was not there. I made a report (Mr. Barker declines to produce this report). I heard the sergeant's directions to take Andrews outside. When Andrews was outside he still continued making a noise. There were no howls or cries downstairs. Andrews had some blood on his face, some dry, some fresh.

John Swaite, P.C. 391 G, sworn.

I had a man charged with burglary in custody this night. I saw Andrews brought in. I didn't see Manning there at all.

Cross-examined.

I made a report. Andrews had a mark near the eye, and there was blood trickling. He had no bruises on the face. I heard the sergeant tell the P.C.'s to take Andrews outside as he was making such a noise, and he pointed to the door. Andrews kept on afterwards—crying and hollering about something or other. I saw him brought in—he looked the same then. He asked if he could have some water, and he had some.

Hugh West, P.C. 263 G, sworn.

I saw Andrews brought in. P.C. Manning was not there.

Cross-examined.

I was reprimanded by Mr. Cluer for trying to mislead him.

Thomas William, 204 G, sworn.

On 29th July, early morning, I was at the station when Andrews was brought in. I was in plain clothes. Manning was not in the charge-room at all.

Cross-examined.

Andrews had blood on his forehead, it was more over the eye than anywhere else. I saw him taken out to the door. The sergeant ordered that. He said, Take him outside on the landing. He made a noise outside, moans and groans—like he generally does. I have heard him on one occasion when he was charged and on one occasion when the charge was not taken, that was about nine months ago. He made no complaint against the police then. I have seen one witness—passing in the street since this case was on—not to speak to.

Herbert Bartram, P.C. 41 G, sworn.

On 29th July I was engaged with Obany and Bassett. Andrews was brought in while I was there, and was struggling and shouting.

Cross-examined.

I saw Andrews taken outside by direction of the sergeant—that is in my report. He was shouting and howling. He was the same when he was brought in again.

Andrews had a mark on his forehead, on the side of right eye. I saw blood on his face.

Discharged.

A Copy of Notes taken at the Old Street Police Court on 29th September, 1906, before H. C. Biron, Esq., in the case of Andrews v. Dawson and Peck—Assault.

DAWSON, 371 G.
PECK, 245 G.

William Andrews, sworn.

On 29th July, at about midnight, I was arrested. I had not then been hit in the face by anyone and had no mark. 371 G was one who had me in custody at first, with another one—not 245—371 (Dawson), came up second. He gave me up to Peck. On the way to the station Peck twisted my arms behind me as hard as he could. He was on my right side. I was taken into the charge room ; the sergeant said, "Downstairs with him." These two and others (10 or 12), took me down, punched me and kicked me, while these two held my arms behind me. Peck kicked me downstairs up the backside. He also hit me on the jaw first. Dawson hit me, but did not kick me ; my jaw was swollen out here. I had cuts over the right eye.

Both defendants had hold of me and could have prevented it. They helped to do it instead.

After about quarter of an hour I was brought up and charged. I was almost unconscious. Then I was taken to the cells, and bailed in three hours. Then I and two friends went to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. I knew these P.C.'s before, but not their names.

I was sober and went to the station quietly. I was not violent at all. I was bound over.

Cross-examined.

I knew on 29th July that these two assaulted me. I think I applied for summonses before 24th August. I did not know I should be able to carry this through, it costs money. I am not paying for this prosecution. I summoned Manning myself, as he was the biggest coward, so I summoned him first. I was first assisted by this Society about two weeks after. I had a letter sent to me from this Court. Then I went to the Society. I took out summonses against Manning when I did not know of the Society at all. Dawson was in the rank with Manning for identification. I said nothing about him because I did not mean to summons him. I did not tell Inspector Allison I did not know who assaulted me. At any rate, I did not refer to the two because I did not know them both.

I think I have known Dawson two years ; I believe he has been in the district over six months.

I told Mr. Cluer I was assaulted by several constables ; I did not mention these two in particular. I was almost sure the case against Manning would fail because I had heard the defence before. Dawson was not the first one to arrest me. It was Stevenson (who is now in Court).

Dawson was the first one to get hold of me. Then Stevenson came up. The cut over my eye was not done by a beer-can. I know who did it, but not defendant. I complained when I was bailed out—not before—to the Inspector in charge. The sergeant was there also. When I was charged nothing was said about the cut over my eye. Dawson did not say I got it from a beer-can or a scrimmage in the street.

I was fined £4 for indecency once. I never knew Belcher till I was arrested. I know him now pretty well. I was with him last night. He had a little more drink last night than was good for him, and I put him in a cab.

I was not violent at all.

Re-examined.

Before Mr. Cluer I complained of several assaulting me. Manning is the one who cut my forehead.

By Magistrate.

Manning struck me first. He started it. They all have a grudge against me for reporting them. I never reported Manning, Dawson, or Peck.

I had been arrested before, but the charge was refused. Defendant did not arrest me.

Dr. Dobson, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, sworn.

On 29th July complainant came to hospital. I treated him. I sewed up a wound on right forehead. It was a recent wound. I should say within an hour or two. I put in not more than three or four stitches.

Cross-examined.

It was not serious.

By Magistrate.

It is possible that it might have been caused by a fist, but I took no particular notice. I remember no other injuries to him. I should have noticed it if he had a swollen or put-out jaw. He had not a black eye—not a bad one, anyway.

Annetta Chapman, widow, 3, Alexandra Buildings, sworn.

On the night of 29th July I saw complainant outside "The Antelope." There was no bother then.

A few minutes later I saw a P.C. catch hold of him. I asked what he could have done. Complainant said, "They ought not to take me, but those who interfered with me." He was not violent. He said, "I won't go without my hat." He had no marks on his face. It was under a lamp.

I don't know complainant.

Cross-examined.

I was not a witness before. I did not see the incident of the beer-can. I did not give evidence for complainant next day.

Annie Webster, married, 23, Granville Buildings, sworn.

I had a dispute with complainant, and some beer was thrown over him.

The can did not strike him at all.

Cross-examined.

I told Sergeant Cunningham I did not throw the can. I did not say I knew nothing about the incident at all. My husband was present.

Thomas Blecher, Engineer, 5, Daray Buildings, London Fields, sworn.

I never knew complainant till this occurred. On 29th July I saw him drawn into a little disorderly crowd. Two policemen arrested him. I saw nothing of the beer-throwing. Complainant was not violent at all. He was standing on the kerb.

One constable took him. Then another one came up. I saw no reason why he should be arrested. I could not say if there was. I saw none.

I followed to the station.

On the way the treatment was rather severe. One held him on each hand. The one on the left used unnecessary violence. He held his hand over his shoulder. He did not resist at all. He doubled over. The elderly constable was relieved at the corner by another one. The new constable also twisted his arm.

I got bail for complainant. When he came out his handkerchief was stained with blood. He was without a mark when he went in. When he came out his right eye was discoloured, and he had an wound over his brow.

Cross-examined.

I was with complainant last night. I did not have too much to drink. I was not put into a cab because I was incapable. It was because I was surrounded by constables. I did not pay for it. I expect the Association did. I did not incite complainant to resist the police on his arrest.

I saw P.C. Stevenson an hour afterwards or more. I did not ask him if they would accept bail for complainant. I did not tell Stevenson I had been a City policeman, and that it would take more than that to take me. He did not say that he was surprised to see me incite him to resist. I saw Stevenson at 3 a.m. My wife and children waited for me. Then we all went home in a cab.

I saw a woman with a can of beer. Complainant was supposed to have been struck. He had beer on his collar. I am now speaking on the paper report.

It was the right eye of the complainant that was swollen and had a cut over it. I saw no other marks.

Susan Withey, married, 181, Langboon Buildings, sworn.

I did not know complainant.

I saw a crowd, and also a can thrown. It caught a window, and the beer went over someone. It did not hit complainant.

I saw complainant arrested. He was walking along very quietly, and not violent.

His face was not bruised or marked. His hat was off.

A Copy of Notes taken at the Old Street Police Court on 6th October, 1906, before H. C. Biron, Esq., in the case of Andrews v. Dawson and Peck. Assault.

Eliza Lewis, married, 40, Granville Buildings, sworn.

On night 29th July I saw complainant in Lake Street, outside a chandler's shop, and two constables had him. He was covered with beer. I asked a constable to let me lend my handkerchief to wipe his face. The constable said "Certainly." I did so; no blood, but only beer on it. Dawson was one of the officers who had complainant. He had no marks on his face. He did not seem at all drunk. He was not violent or disorderly. He asked for his hat, which he had lost in the scuffle.

Cross-examined.

I first heard of this a week after Bank Holiday Sunday. That night I was asked to give evidence. I was not asked then whether there was blood on his face. I was asked when I came here to give evidence. He had no cut on his eye. I gave evidence on 13th August.

By Magistrate.

The scuffle was when complainant kept asking for his hat.

FREDERICK LANG, Engineer's Assistant, 30, Granville Buildings ,sworn.

I saw complainant on the night of 29th July being taken to the station.

He had no marks on him then.

His arms were being twisted up his back, and he could hardly walk. He was not resisting.

I saw him when he came out. I had been home, and returned with his landlord. When he came out he had a cut on his eye, swollen face, and a lump on the back of his head.

I went to the hospital with him.

Cross-examined.

I live in the same buildings as complainant, but only know him as a neighbour; I am not a friend of his now.

I did not see the beer-throwing.

His face was dry when he was arrested. He had beer on it.

I did not notice a black eye when he came out of the station.

The side of his face was swollen.

FRANCIS BASSETT, sworn.

I saw complainant at the station. When I was charged my charge was dismissed. Complainant had no marks on his face that I noticed.

I did not see him again till the morning at this court.

Cross-examined.

I did not hear Andrews' case before Mr. Cluer. Last time I did say "I won't say he had not got a cut over his eye."

REUBEN HUGHES, 9, Granville Buildings, sworn.

I saw complainant in custody. He had no marks on his face then.

I only know him by sight. I never noticed he was wet. He walked all right with the constable right to the station.

The constables twisted his arms, but he made no resistance.

Next day he had a plaster over his eye on the forehead. I saw him from three storeys up.

Cross-examined.

About a fortnight after it I was asked to give evidence. I read this letter in "The Star" (read by Mr. Barker). The cut over the eye was not mentioned till I came to this court.

ELLEN GIBBS, 17, Camden Terrace, married, sworn.

On 29th July I was with Mr. Lewis, and saw complainant in custody of two constables. She wiped complainant's face. He had no blood on him, but had beer on his face. I saw him taken to the end of the street. He did not seem violent. The constables waited for his hat to be brought. I did not see them do anything to complainant.

I had never seen complainant before. He is not a friend of mine

Cross-examined.

I have often seen people arrested.

Re-examined.

I noticed it because his hat was off, and they were waiting for it.

FOR DEFENCE.

FRANK DAWSON, 371 G, sworn.

On 29th July, about 12.15 a.m., I was in Luke Street, where I saw complainant fighting a man and a woman in a crowd. I separated them. He called the woman a b—— coward, and rushed at her. He hit her in the mouth, and she hit him with a quart can. I then arrested him, and he hit me in the mouth. I am sure the can hit him on right side of face.

I went a little way with him, and was surrounded by a hostile crowd, chiefly his friends. They then said, "Go on, Skin, have a cut." I got about a hundred yards, and he said, "I won't go till I get my cap." I advised him to go quietly, when P.C. Stevens came to my assistance, and also advised him to go quietly. He said, "I won't go till I get my cap." One of his friends went for it, but as he did not soon return we went on. One man, named Belcher, got in front of us (the witness) and advised him not to go. Complainant struggled and tried to trip us. I told Belcher he would be arrested if he continued to obstruct us. At the corner of Curtain Road 245 Peck came to our aid.

Complainant promised to go quietly, and Peck took him from Stevens. Stevens is on special duty outside a warehouse, so he had to go back.

Complainant came quietly for a time, and then again tried to trip us. Twice in doing so he went down on his knees. Nearly at top of Curtain Road there were other officers with charges, and the crowd came no further. Complainant stopped, and said, "I won't go any further till you let me wipe my face." 245 allowed him to wipe his face. There was blood on it from cut on forehead made by the beer can. No woman but Mrs. Chapman had spoken to us. No woman wiped his face. Stevenson did not come to me till I had gone 100 yards. At the station complainant still resisted us, and used obscene language. Other charges were being taken, and the sergeant said: "Take him on the landing." Peck and I (only) took him on to the landing—no further—not downstairs. We were there about ten minutes. He was not exactly violent, but resisted us enough to make us keep hold of him. We used no violence, and did not kick or punch him. He kept on abusing us. There was no one else outside but the three of us.

I have been in this district six months. I came from "N," Tottenham, and did not know Andrews till I came here, so he did not know me two years. I had only seen him once before—a week previous.

When we brought him into the charge room again, he was put in dock, and I preferred charges of disorderly conduct, obscene language, and assault on me.

Peck did not kick or punch him. He was not taken downstairs at all. Sergeant asked me how complainant got cut over eye. I said, "In fighting a man and a woman. The woman hit him with a beer can." Complainant said nothing to that. He only asked for bail. He was not dazed or stupid.

I offered him no violence at any time, and no other force than was requisite. I returned to my beat. Next day complainant was bound over. He said nothing about violence by me and Peck. He did not cross-examine me as to violence I had used. He complained to Mr. Cluer of being assaulted by the police. He said: "A sergeant and three P.C.'s took me downstairs and assaulted me."

Mr. Cluer told him if he liked to take steps he would be pleased to investigate it. He (complainant) did not suggest Peck or I was one of the constables. I was present at the parade with other officers, and complainant said nothing about my assaulting him. He walked straight to Manning, and picked him out. Till 24th August I did not know that there was any suggestion against me.

Cross-examined.

I ducked my head, and did not catch the full force of complainant's blow. It hit me on the side of my face. I told Mr. Cluer it was trifling. I showed him cut inside my lip.

The blow to the woman was severe, but she did not prefer a charge of assault. That is practically what I arrested him for—disorderly conduct. The woman was dragged away. I believe she admitted on the first occasion that she was assaulted. I can't understand why complainant's friends have not come to give evidence.

His own brother was present.

I have not kept a pretty good eye on the witnesses. My beat is near where complainant lives.

Complainant was not groaning on the landing as if in pain.

I don't understand how P.C. Williams said he was. I don't think it was an invention on his part. I can only suggest that complainant could, perhaps, get an idea of the back of the premises, so as to describe them to the Magistrate. I was not present when complainant was arrested on a charge which the sergeant refused. I did not twist complainant's arms at all even when he tried to trip me.

I told Mr. Cluer that complainant was violent, and I had to get assistance. Complainant complained of assault, but did not at once ask for summonses. He did not ask to take steps then. Mr. Cluer told him if he liked to take proceedings he would be pleased to investigate it.

I was not put to watch Belcher, the witness. I was on my beat, present when he was put into a cab. There was only one other officer present, P.C. Chudleigh. I have not talked over this case with Sergeant Holland. I have with other constables. When I took complainant in he had corroded blood on his face. It was noticeable. There was no suggestion to call a doctor. It was a very small wound. I should have thought a bit of plaster would have met the case. It was an inch or more long. I did not see Mrs. Lewis there. What she says is an entire make up. Mr. Chapman said, "Give him a chance. Let him go." I should doubt if she is a stranger to him. We held complainant's arms down to his side.

Re-examined.

I explained to the Magistrate that the assault on me was not serious.

WILLIAM PECK, 245 G, sworn.

I was on Curtain Road point and saw complainant in custody of Dawson and Stevenson. He was struggling. He had a cut over his right eye, and a little moist blood. Stevenson left us and I helped Dawson. On the way complainant kept using his legs to trip us down. Belcher was in the crowd and said, "Don't you go, Skin. It would take more than two of you to take me." I asked him to be quiet. Two men caught hold of him and kept him back. In the station complainant was abusive. Sergeant said, "Take him out on the landing." Dawson and I took him there, but not downstairs; no one was there but us three. He continued to abuse us and wanted us to leave go of his arms. I did not kick him or punch him. Dawson did nothing to him. Till last Saturday I never heard it suggested that I kicked or punched him. No violence was used to him while we were outside. No unnecessary force was used at any time while I was there. We placed him in the dock and Dawson stated the charge. Sergeant asked Dawson, "How did he get the cut over his eye"? Dawson said, "In the fight." Complainant did not deny it. Complainant was not dazed. He said, "I am sorry; I was not going to be hit for nothing. Can I have bail"? This was while Dawson stated charge. He was taken to cells, and I went off duty. Next day I was in court. Complainant did not suggest that I assaulted him. I did not give evidence.

Cross-examined.

After case was finished at this court complainant said, he was taken downstairs by three P.C.'s and a sergeant. The blood on his face was partly dry, partly moist. It was not safe to let go his arms in the station. He was not shouting very loudly, or moaning or groaning. I can't say how Williams said he was. He was making a fairly good noise, shouting, "Let go my arms." I did not see Mrs. Gibbs there. I was not there when Mrs. Lowis is stated to have been there. I have not seen Belcher, except at this court, since the case came on. They had come the length of Luke Street (200 or 300 yards) before I came up. I was not asked in the last case (Manning's) about Blesher's interference. Apparently several people in the crowd were complainant's friends. They called him by his nickname.

ALF STEVENSON, 337 G, sworn.

I was on special duty outside a warehouse. I saw complainant in custody of 371 (Dawson). He had a slight mark over his right eye. A number of people were behaving in a threatening way. Complainant asked 371 why he was in custody. 371 said, "For assaulting me and fighting in the street." Complainant was very violent all the way down Luke Street. Belcher incited complainant not to be taken into custody. He said, "Don't go, Skin; don't be taken by them." Further on, the crowd shouted, "Kick the sods. Don't go." I only went to corner of Luke Street, 10—15 minutes. After I returned Belcher asked me if I thought they would take bail for complainant. I said, "I think they would." We had some further conversation. While I was with them no more force than necessary was used to complainant.

Cross-examined.

Complainant had no hat on. The mark on his forehead was bleeding slightly. I could not say whether he was wet with beer. I saw no woman come and ask to wipe his face. Mrs. Lowis did not ask me. No one did. This is a dark neighbourhood. I saw no one lend complainant a handkerchief. I did not go to the station till after 6 a.m. I have made no inquiries about any of the witnesses. I made a report about a week after, and submitted it through the Inspector. I did not talk it over with other P.C.'s before I made the report; but since then I have. I had spoken of it before to other officers. It has been a general topic.

WILLIAM HOLLAND, Station Sergeant 9 G, sworn.

I was in charge of the station from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. Defendants brought in complainant, who was violent and noisy. He had a cut on the right side of his face—bleeding. I was doing other charges, and I said to Andrew that he must be quiet. He was not, so I told the officers to take him out on the landing till I was ready. They were outside till I was ready. I could hear a noise, as of two men trying to overpower one another. I heard no abusive language. He was brought in in eight or ten minutes. So far as I know, only those three were outside. The charge was stated by Dawson. I asked him how complainant got the mark on the face. He said it was done by a woman. I should say it was a slight mark. Complainant was still violent, but not so bad as before. He was not dazed. Complainant said in answer to the charge, "Right." When I was taking it he asked for bail. I said he could have it after the charge was taken. I and the gaoler took him to the cells.

I saw him at 2 a.m., when the sergeant took him over the station. Then I went out on patrol till about 6. While I was there no other sergeant was present. There is only one in charge at night.

There was no Inspector there while complainant was in. I was the officer of highest rank present. There was never any suggestion of my assaulting complainant.

He made no complaint while I was there of being assaulted.

Cross-examined.

There were several constables in the station when complainant came in. Complainant did not say in my hearing, "I'm not going to be hit about for nothing." No doubt I should hear any abusive language if there were any. I heard none. I heard no moans and groans. When complainant was brought in his cut was bleeding slightly in a line with the eye. I did not examine it thoroughly. I made a report, and gave it to the officer in charge, S.D. Inspector, about two days later, I think. I do not think I entered in any station book the condition of complainant. If a man had a cut I should not enter it in a book. If it were serious I should call a doctor and make an entry; otherwise I would make no entry. I did not return to station at 3.15 a.m. I am positive.

GEORGE ALLISON, G Inspector, sworn.

July 31st complainant came to station about 12.10 p.m. and said he wanted the name and number of constable who was on the station steps when he was brought in on the Sunday (29th), who had struck him in the face with his fist, cutting his eye with a ring. I asked him if he knew the constable. He said, "No, I only know him by the name of Charley Wood." I told him we had no one of that name at the station. He said, "He was in plain clothes, and he struck me. That led up to the disturbance in the charge room." He said he did not know who else assaulted him, because there were 12 or 14 of them, and he would not be able to identify them. He should not trouble about them, but would only trouble about the one who was in plain clothes. I pointed to the steps into the station from the street, and he said he meant those. He said he could identify the officer. I made arrangements. He said nothing about defendants.

Cross-examined.

He appeared most bitter about Charley Wood. I find afterwards that that is Manning.

WILLIAM ROBERTS, Sergeant 17 G, sworn.

On 29th July I succeeded Holland from 2 to 6 a.m. Holland went at 2 a.m. and did not return till 6 a.m. I was in sole charge. I saw no inspector till about 5.40 a.m. Payne was in about 3 a.m. Herwin was with me. I took over the prisoners from Holland. Complainant was bailed at 2.30 a.m. I produce the Bail Book. Complainant and the bailee signed it. The rest is my writing. When brought out, complainant said, "Another f—— sergeant." He made no complaint to me. His language was very bad.

Cross-examined.

I did not go into his cell; I only looked through the trap-door, as usual. We only ask, "Are you all right?"—unless they don't answer, then we go in. Complainant answered "All right."

When he came out I saw a slight mark over his right eye, with dry blood on it. It was near the eye or over it.

CHARLES HERWIN, 335 G, sworn.

I was gaoler on 29th July when complainant was brought in. He was very violent. Holland said, "Take him on the landing." He was taken with defendants. They did not go downstairs. They remained outside eight or ten minutes.

I saw him brought in, and I was there when he was bailed. I heard him make no complaint at either time.

Cross-examined.

I did not hear him say "I'm not going to be hit for nothing"; I think I should have heard it if he did. I was not on the landing, but I could see through the glass door. I could not hear any abusive language. I could hear him bawling out, not in pain, a kind of "yawning noise." I heard no groans or moans. I don't know whether it was in pain or not. If anything had taken place I should have seen it. I went to the cells with complainant. Slight cut over right eye, or near it; no cut on forehead.

Re-examined.

I only obey the sergeant; I pay little attention to charges.

ALFRED PAYNE, 420 G, sworn.

I was on duty in station when complainant came in. Cut over right eye. Complainant struggled and made a great noise, and was taken on the landing. I was present when he was brought back into charge room.

My duty was to be on the door or to go on messages. I did not hear complainant make any complaint.

Cross-examined.

The cut was over the eye (points to his own eye to indicate it).

Note.—All the accused P.C.'s were discharged.

POLICE REPORTS.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Old Street Station. G Division.

31st July, 1906.

With reference to report called for re an alleged assault on William Andrews, I beg to state that I was on duty as gaoler when William Andrews was brought to the station by P.C.'s 371 G Dawson, and 245 G Peck. He was very violent, and creating a great noise. The station sergeant was inquiring into a case of burglary, and two other prisoners were in the charge room. He then ordered P.C.'s 371 and 245 G to take the prisoner on the landing which divides the charge room and the cells, which was done. I had the prisoner continually under my observation till he was charged, and did not see the prisoner assaulted at the station. He made no complaint when charged or bailed.

I beg to report that at 12.30 a.m., 30th inst., I assisted P.C. 371 G Dawson to arrest William Andrews for being disorderly and using obscene language and assaulting P.C. Dawson. He was very violent on way to the station, and on arrival at station he was very violent and noisy. The station sergeant was taking other charges, and directed us to take him to the landing between the charge room and cells, which was done, and he was restrained. No violence of any kind was used to him, and he made no complaint when he was charged. His face was swollen and his eye slightly cut when he was arrested.

In reference to report called for re William Andrews, charged at above station with disorderly conduct and assault on Saturday, the 28th inst., I beg to report that at 12.15 a.m. on the 28th inst., whilst on duty in Luke Street, I saw Andrews surrounded by a large crowd of people fighting with a man and woman and making use of very obscene language. P.C. requested him to go away, but he rushed at the woman and struck her in the mouth, she at the same time striking him in the face with a quart beer can. I then took him into custody, when he struck me in the mouth with his fist and then became very violent. P.C. 245 then came to my assistance, and he was taken to station, being very violent all the way, several times throwing himself to the ground. On arriving at station some other charges were being taken, and several persons being in charge room and the prisoner still being violent, P.C. was directed to take prisoner on to a landing outside charge room, where he was taken by P.C. reporting and P.C. 245, and remained there for about five minutes. No violence of any kind was used towards him, and there were no other police present other than myself and P.C. 245.

With reference to attached report, I beg to report that at 12.35 a.m., 29th inst., P.C.'s 371 G Dawson and 245 G Peck brought to station Wm. Andrews, a polisher, of 37, Granville Buildings, Luke Street, Finsbury, on a charge of disorderly conduct by fighting, using obscene language, and assaulting P.C. Dawson. I noticed Andrews had a swollen face and was bleeding slightly; he was excited and very violent, the two P.C.'s being scarcely able to restrain him. I was inquiring into a case of burglary, and also had two other prisoners in the charge-room awaiting to be charged, and owing to the confusion caused by Andrews' violence it was necessary to restore order, and I directed the P.C.'s to take him to the passage between the cells and charge-room. Before he was charged I inquired of P.C. Dawson how Andrews' face was hurt. He replied Andrews was fighting with a man at Luke Street, and swore at a woman, who, having a can with beer in it, threw it at him and struck him on the face with it (the can). The marks were slight, and did not necessitate the calling of the Divisional Surgeon. He was charged, and when read to him, he replied "Right."

There was no assault committed on Andrews whilst at station, and no other sergeant was present. He made no complaint of having been assaulted by police when charged or when he was bailed at 2.30 a.m., 29th inst., by P.S. 17 G Roberts.

W. Hollands, Stn. Sgt.

Submitted.—The cell passage referred to is the landing immediately outside the charge-room door, and between that room and the cells belonging to the police court. Andrews has made no application for a summons at present. He is well known to police as a determined thief and a desperate character. His description appears in case No. 100, Special Release Notice, 1st February, 1902.

30th July, 1906.

I beg to report having attended on duty at Old Street Police Court 30th, when William Andrews, a french polisher, appeared on a charge of disorderly behaviour by fighting; further, with assaulting P.C. 371 G Dawson. The P.C. deposed that he saw the prisoner fighting with a man and a woman; that he (P.C.) several times requested him to desist, and as he refused he arrested him; that prisoner at once became violent, and struck him on the mouth with his fist, causing a slight cut on his lip. Prisoner, in defence, alleged that he was beaten inside the police station. I asked the learned Magistrate (A. R. Cluer, Esq.) if he would adjourn the case to enable the station officer to attend in explanation. The Magistrate remarked that he was only trying the case against the prisoner, but that if such maltreatment had occurred inside the station, as alleged, it could be investigated. Prisoner thereupon asked if he could have summonses against the police for assault. The learned Magistrate said he would consider the matter if proper application was made. Prisoner was then bound over in the sum of £5 to keep the peace for twelve months in respect of the slight assault on the constable. Andrews then left the court. No application was made for summonses for assault. Seen and initialled by Mr. Morrison, Clerk.

Submitted with reports from the station sergeant and all the constables concerned, who all deny that the man was assaulted in any way at the station or that he made any complaint of being assaulted by police when he was charged or when bailed later. Andrews has not attended the court to apply for a summons, but he went to the station at 12.10 p.m. this day (31st), and then alleged that he was assaulted on the station steps as he was being taken into the station by a P.C. in plain clothes, and he wished to obtain his number with a view to applying for a summons against him.

Inquiry is being made into this, but at present it is not known that any P.C. in plain clothes was there. This was the first time this allegation was mentioned.

Old Street Station. G Division.

July 31st, 1906.

I beg to report that, after being relieved from duty at 9 p.m. Saturday, 28th inst., I went for a walk with P.C. 439 G Percival, and after doing some shopping we returned together about 11.30 p.m., and entered the station by the side gate and went into the station mess and had some refreshment, remaining a few minutes. Then I went upstairs in company with P.C.'s 439 G Percival and 379 G Lane to the brushing room, and changed my boots and then proceeded to bed, Percival going into the mess kitchen, and Lane left me at the lavatory door. Whilst undressing, I heard Lane pass my door. I called out to him, "Don't forget me in the morning, Harry, as I am leave, and I want to get up in good time." I did not leave my room again for any purpose until 10 a.m. 29th inst. I was not on the station steps on the night in question, and did not go into any part of the station after reporting off duty at 9 p.m., and I did not know the man had been charged until the following day (Sunday), when I heard some of the P.C.'s in the section house speaking about it. I do not wear a ring, and have never worn one in my life.

31st July, 1906.

I beg to report that at 12.10 p.m., 31st inst., William Andrews, of 37, Granville Buildings, Luke Street, came to this station and stated that while being brought into the station in custody on 29th inst., and when on the station steps he was assaulted by a constable in plain clothes, who struck him on the face with his fist and kicked him on the legs. He said he did not know the P.C.'s name and number, but he knew him as Charlie Woods, and that he was wearing a ring at the time, which caused the injury to his eye and led up to the disturbance in the charge-room. He further stated he would not know the other constables who assaulted him, as there were quite 12 or 14 of them, and would take no action as regards them, but he would apply for a summons against the constable who was in plain clothes and struck him when on the station steps.

As Andrews said he could identify the P.C., arrangements were made for the constables off duty at the time of the alleged assault to attend this station at 3.30 p.m., 31st inst., to afford him an opportunity of doing so.

G. ALLISON, Inspr.

Submitted.—Andrews attended as arranged, and picked out P.C. 226 G Wm. Manning as his assailant. I supplied him with the P.C.'s name and number. He stated that he would apply for a summons 1st prox., and declined to make any further statement. P.C. Manning states that he retired to bed a few minutes before midnight. He was seen proceeding to the dormitory by P.C.'s 439 Percival, 379 Lane, and 13 GR Fraser. Whilst he was undressing he heard P.C. Lane pass his door, and spoke to him. At 12.10 a.m. he also spoke to P.C. 91 Lynch, who sleeps in the next cubicle, and asked him to extinguish the gas. P.S. 22 Robertson called the section-house roll, and at 12.10 a.m. saw P.C. Manning in bed. P.C. 420 Paine (the constable on station reserve duty) and P.C.'s Dawson and Peck, who arrested Andrews, each state that no assault was committed on the prisoner as alleged, and that at no stage of the proceedings was the accused constable present.

A. PILGRIM, S.D. Inspr.

Submitted.—Andrews is the man who alleged before the Magistrate that he was taken to the basement of the station and assaulted, but he said nothing about being assaulted at the entrance to the station, either to the Magistrate or anyone until he went to the station yesterday. There is overwhelming evidence that the P.C. who was identified and who is known by the name mentioned by the complainant had nothing whatever to do in the matter, and was in bed at the time. No application has been made for a summons up to the present.

6th August, 1906.

Referring to the reports submitted 1st inst. respecting a complaint made by William Andrews of having been assaulted by P.C. 225 G Manning, whom he (Andrews) alleged was in plain clothes at the entrance to Old Street Station, and there committed the assault as he (Andrews) was taken into the station by other constables.

Andrews applied to A. R. Cluer, Esq., at Old Street this morning (6th) for a summons against P.C. Manning, which was granted and made returnable for 2 p.m. 13th inst.

There are several witnesses, including P.S. 22 Robertson, who called the section-house roll, who can prove that P.C. Manning went to his bunk and was in bed some 15 or 20 minutes before the time of the alleged assault.

This P.C. was not concerned in the case against Andrews, and, according to the statements of those who were there, he was not present, and if that be so the allegation against him is altogether untrue. I beg to recommend that legal aid be supplied to defend the P.C.

With reference to report called for re Andrews, I beg to state that on the night of July 28th, 1906, I was on special duty outside Messrs. De la Rue's warehouse when, about 12.15 a.m., 29th inst., I saw P.C.

371 Dawson with Andrews in custody bleeding from a cut over the eye, and surrounded by a disorderly crowd. Andrews was struggling and saying he would not be taken to the station. I went to P.C. 371's assistance, when a man named Belcher and others in the crowd incited him to resist being taken into custody. On arriving at the corner of Luke Street, P.C. 245 Peck came up and took him to the station, Andrews promising to go quietly. I watched them for a short distance up Curtain Road. The crowd then dispersed. Belcher and some of his friends came to me shortly afterwards, and asked if they would accept bail for him. I referred them to the station. Belcher then said he had been a City Police officer, and it would take more than six policemen to take him. I said, "If that is true, I am surprised at you inciting the prisoner to resist and assault us, but were not man enough to go to the station," if he thought he could do any good. He then said he did not think of that. He then went in that direction.

With reference to attached report,

I beg to report that it refers to summons against P.C. 226 Manning.

P.C. 337 G Stevenson is the constable referred to by Andrews in his evidence as to the P.C. who assisted P.C. 371 G Dawson to take him part of the way to station, and then handed him over to a younger constable. This P.C. throws some doubt on the evidence of Belcher, who stated he followed all the way, and saw Andrews taken into the station.

Re complaint of assault by police on William Andrews.

I beg to state that at 12.30 a.m., 29th July, 1906, I was engaged with a charge at the station when Andrews was brought in in the custody of P.C. 245 Peck and 371 Dawson. He was very noisy, shouting and struggling, and I noticed he was bleeding slightly from a cut over right eye. P.S. Hollands, who was in charge of station and engaged taking a charge at the time, told the P.C.'s to take him outside the door in consequence of his noise. Shortly after he was brought back and charged, and during the time he was in the dock he did not complain of being assaulted. When the charge was read over to him, all he said was, "All right, sergeant; can I have bail?"

He was shouting and struggling with the two P.C.'s, and had a cut over right eye and blood on his face.

Stn. P.S. Hollands, who was engaged taking the charge against the two prisoners for disorderly conduct, said to the P.C.'s, "Take him outside the door," as he (the prisoner) was making so much noise. After the charge had been disposed of he was brought back into the charge-room by the same two P.C.'s, and placed in the dock. He then had the same marks on his face as when first brought into the station. I did not hear any complaint of assault made by the prisoner during the time I was there.

I beg to report that, 24th inst., Wm. Andrews applied to H. C. Biron, Esq., at Old Street Police Court for summonses against Stn. P.S. Hollands and P.C.'s 371 Dawson and 245 Peck for being concerned in the alleged assault on him.

He stated that he had eight or nine more witnesses to call, also the two men Obeney and Bassett, who were in the dock when he was first taken into the charge-room, and alleged that Constables Dawson and Peck held his arms whilst he was assaulted, and that Dawson afterwards let go and struck him.

In reply to the Magistrate as to why he had not applied for these summonses before, he replied that work was bad and he hadn't got the money, and that when making his first application he did not know he could ask for a summons against the P.C.'s who arrested him.

The Magistrate granted a summons against each of the constables, but declined to grant one against the sergeant.

Mr. Nicholson, the solicitor who appeared for Andrews on 21st inst., was not present, and Andrews made the application himself.

Both the summonses are for hearing with the adjourned summons at 2 p.m., Tuesday, 28th inst.

REPORTS OF CONSTABLES.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Kennington Road Station. L Division,

September 9th, 1906.

P.C. 383 L John Morgan reports that at 11.15 p.m., 9th inst., I was on duty in Oakley Street, Lambeth, when I had an occasion to arrest George Mullins for being drunk and disorderly and using obscene language in the above street. He was fighting with another man, and I requested him to go away, which he did, but shortly afterwards returned and repeated his conduct. I again told him to go away, and he said he would f——ing well go when he liked, and I took him into custody.

At the station he told the Inspector he had been struck in the mouth, saying it had been done by me, which I deny.

With reference to the evidence given at police court by George Mullins, arrested for being drunk, disorderly, and using obscene language in Oakley Street.

I beg to report there is no truth in it. He did not tap me on the schoulder, nor did I hear his remark, "It is earhole again." He also accused me of striking him on the ribs, which I deny. I did not see his daughter there. He did not ask me for my number. I did seize him by the neck. I had to do so owing to his violence. I did not push him with my knee on the way to the station, nor did I strike him. I did not use more violence than was necessary in taking him to the station.

On Inspector Wheeler entering the charge room Mullins complained that he had been struck in the mouth by P.C. Morgan at the station, but there is no truth in this allegation.

With reference to the statement made by the prisoner at the hearing of the case at court, I beg to report that Mullins made no complaint at the station respecting the alleged assault in the street, neither did he request that P.C. Morgan should not take him to the cell.

Kennington Road Station. L Division,

September 9th, 1906.

I beg to report that I was in charge of Kennington Road Station from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. 10th inst.

At 11.30 p.m., 9th inst., P.C. 383 L John Morgan brought to this station George Mullins, age 34, of 35, Johanna Street, Lambeth, market porter, on a charge of being drunk and disorderly and making use of obscene language at Oakley Street.

On their arrival at station I immediately followed them into the charge room, when the prisoner said, "This man," pointing to P.C. 383 L Morgan, "has just struck me in the mouth inside this room." I said, "Why didn't you shout or call out?" Prisoner said, "I didn't think of it."

I asked P.C. Morgan if he had assaulted the prisoner. He replied, "No, sir." I also asked P.C. 58 L Hunt and P.C. 412 L Saunders, who were both on reserve duty, and in the charge room at the time the prisoner was brought in, if the prisoner had been assaulted by the P.C. as suggested; they both replied "No, sir." All this was said in the presence of the prisoner.

P.C. Morgan again repeated that prisoner had been fighting with another man, at Oakley Street, and refused to go away.

Prisoner was charged with being drunk, disorderly, and making use of obscene language, and when read over to him said, "I admit all that."

At 11.45 p.m., after he was placed in the cell, he denied being drunk, and requested to be examined by a doctor, and Divisional Surgeon was called.

At 12 night, Dr. Henry, Divisional Surgeon, attended, and certified that he (prisoner) had been drinking, but did not consider him drunk at time of examination.

At 12.55 a.m., 10th, I admitted Mullins to bail.

I further beg to report that about one minute elapsed between the time of the prisoner entering the station and the time I entered the charge room, and that there is not a particle of truth in the allegation made against the constable.

T. WHEELER, Inspector.

H. NOVISS, Superintendent.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Kennington Road Station. L Division,

September 10th, 1906.

I beg to report that George Mullins, age 34, of 35, Johanna Street, Lambeth, was charged at 11.30 p.m., 9th inst., with being drunk, disorderly, and making use of obscene language at Oakley Street.

Prisoner appeared at Tower Bridge Police Court, 10th inst., before J. Rose, Esq., Magistrate, who remarked, "I am not satisfied with the case," and discharged the prisoner.

Prisoner gave evidence on his own behalf, and said, "At 11 p.m. I was in the Duke of Sussex Public-house, my girl, age 11, was with me, and on leaving I saw the P.C. talking to two marine store dealers, named Sims, in Oakley Street. I clapped him (P.C.) on the shoulder, and said, 'At the earhole again.'" By Magistrate: "What did you mean by that?" Prisoner: "Taking a bribe. But I only said it in a lark."

Magistrate: "What happened then?" Prisoner: "The constable struck me on the ribs. My daughter started crying. I took her home, after which I returned, and asked the constable for his number. The constable then seized me by the neck and struck me again.

"On way to the station he (P.C.) kept prodding me with his knees, and in the station struck me in the mouth."

The learned Magistrate asked P.C. 383 L Morgan if he desired to ask him (prisoner) any questions. Constable: "No, sir. Only I absolutely deny having in any way assaulted him."

Magistrate: "He makes a very serious accusation against you, and his story is rather circumstantial as to what took place in the street."

Constable: "I was standing alone when this row started. I was ten minutes trying to get him away. I used no more force than was necessary in taking him to the station."

I further beg to report that on investigating the charge made by P.C. against the prisoner, who said in prisoner's hearing that he (prisoner) was drunk, and had been fighting with a man at Oakley Street; he dispersed them, when they again commenced to fight, and prisoner was arrested. Prisoner said, "Yes, I admit all that, but he (P.C.) struck me in the mouth inside this station," which was denied by the P.C., also by both P.C.s on reserve duty.

Prisoner did not before or after being charged make any allegation against the P.C. of having been assaulted in the street before their arrival at the station, and which appears to be an after consideration. T. Wheeler, Inspector.

Sumbitted.

I have taken the statements of the two Mr. Sims, who are marine store dealers at 29, Oakley Street, and they say no fight occurred while they were present.

Statements attached.

F. Spencer, Sub-Divisional Inspector.

Submitted. I am unable to complete this inquiry at present, but as far as I can gather there appears little blame, if any, to the constable. It is probable that witnesses may be found to-day.

H. Noviss, Superintendent.

Statement of Frederick Sims, Marine Store Dealer, of No. 29, Oakley Street, Lambeth.

At 11 p.m., 9th inst., I was near the Duke of Sussex public-house, Oakley Street. George Mullins came up and said to the constable (383), who was just passing, something about "earhole." The constable did not take any notice, and I left.

I did not see Mullins fighting with anyone.

I did not see the constable strike Mullins, and if any fighting took place or the constable struck Mullins it took place after I left. I simply passed the time of day with the constable.

Statement by George Sims, Marine Store Dealer, 29, Oakley Street, Lambeth.

About 11 p.m., 9th inst., I was in Oakley Street, near the Duke of Sussex public-house, with my uncle, Frederick Sims. The constable, whose number I did not notice, was near there, and Mullins came up and said something I did not hear, and then passed on, saying "Good-night, Copper," "Good-night, Fred," "Good-night, George," and we all separated.

I did not see any fight, and did not see the constable strike Mullins. I did not see where either the constable or Mullins went.

I beg to report that when George Mullins, who was charged with being drunk and disorderly at Kennington Road Police Station on 9th inst., was called upon at Tower Bridge Police Court to-day to make his defence, he complained that he had been assaulted by P.C. 383 L (Morgan), and that he was not drunk.

Evidence for the prosecution was given by the above P.C., 58 L (Hunt), 412 L (Saunders), and Inspector Wheeler.

The Divisional Surgeon (Dr. G. N. Henry), who examined the prisoner half an hour after he was charged, certified that he had been drinking, but was not drunk at the time he examined him.

The prisoner elected to give evidence in the witness box, and said: "At 11 p.m. I was in the Duke of Sussex with my daughter, age 11, where I had a glass of cyder. On coming out I saw the P.C. (meaning 383 L) talking to two marine store dealers named Sims. I clapped him on the shoulder, and said 'At the earhole again.' I mistook him for another constable, and meant that he was taking a bribe, only saying it for a lark. The constable struck me in the ribs. My girl commenced to cry. I took her home and then returned. I asked the P.C. for his number. There was another man in plain clothes with him who said, 'Go on, give him one.' The constable took me by the back of the neck and nearly strangled me, and again struck me near a paper shop on the way to the station, and kept prodding me with his knees. In the station, whilst waiting for the Inspector, the constable struck me twice in the mouth, causing it to bleed, and I asked one of the other constables to take me to the cell."

Mr. Rose asked P.C. Morgan if he wished to put any questions. The P.C. said, "No. I deny what he has said altogether." Mr. Rose then said, "He gives a rather circumstantial account of what took place in the street. Don't you wish to ask him anything with regard to the assault?" P.C. Morgan said, "I was standing alone when this started, and I took him to the station with no more force than necessary." The Magistrate then said, "I'm not satisfied about this case. You are discharged."

With reference to complaint against P.C. 383 Morgan.

I beg to report having seen Mr. Cole, licensee of the "Duke of Sussex" P.H., Oakley Street, Lambeth, who stated that Mullins entered the above house about four minutes to eleven o'clock on Sunday evening, just as the house was being closed. He had a drink, and on leaving said "good night" and shook hands with the licensee and wife, which he has never offered to do before. He was the last person to leave the house and had evidently been drinking at some other place prior to calling at the "Duke of Sussex." He did not have a girl with him on entering or leaving the house. Mr. Cole has known Mullins as a rough character for the nine months he has held the licence of the above house.

He did not see the arrest and knew nothing of it until the following morning.

P.C. Morgan has now stated that he was assisted through Oakley Street by a man named James Cameron, a stonemason, of 400, Wandsworth Road, who, however, did not go all the way to the station. I have seen Mr. Cameron and taken his statement, which is now attached, in which he says he did not see the commencement of the disturbance, but saw the P.C. struggling with the man and offered to assist. He did assist as far as Westminster Bridge Road, where they came in sight of the police station, and as he did not wish to attend the Court on the following day he there left the constable to take his prisoner the remainder of the distance alone.

Soon after the charge was taken, and before P.C. Morgan had left the station, someone came to the station and required police at China Walk, P.C. Morgan and P.C. 37 L R. Rippin were sent, and a prisoner was taken to Kennington Lane Station. Mr. Cameron also assisted in that case, but again did not wish to attend Court, but gave his name and address. This is how the P.C. got to know his address. Mr. Cameron only knowing the P.C. by sight, having often see him when going through this neighbourhood, which he does frequently.

F. Spencer, Sub-Divisional Inspector.

H. Noviss, Superintendent.

Statement of James Cameron, No. 400 Wansworth Road, Clapham, Stonemason.

At about 11.10 p.m. on Sunday, 9th inst., I was passing through Oakley Street. I saw P.C. 383 struggling with a man. A lot of people got round, and I asked the P.C. if he could manage. He did not reply, but as he seemed to have enough to get on with I assisted him as far as the tram lines at Westminster Bridge Road. I did not hear anyone say "Give him one."

The constable did not use any violence to the prisoner, who continued to struggle. I did not go all the way to the station as I did not want to go to Court next day.

I pass through Oakley Street frequently and have seen the P.C. on duty in the neighbourhood. That is all I know of him.

I waited about outside the station a little while, and a constable was required at China Walk and P.C. 383 accompanied the prisoner arrested there to Kennington Lane, and I assisted to take a man to that station. I gave the inspector my address, and it must have been then that P.C. 383 got to know it.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Kennington Lane Station. L Division.

12th September, 1906.

I beg to report that I have carefully inquired into the alleged allegations made by George Mullins.

It will be seen that he entered the "Duke of Sussex" P.H., Oakley Street, just before closing time on Sunday, 9th inst. The landlord saw that he was excited. He had a drink but had no child with him when he entered or left. He is known to him as a low man, and is frequently talking of fighting. He shook hands with the licensee and his wife on leaving at 11 p.m., which he has never done before. This, I submit, proves that he had been drinking, and the licensee is of the same opinion. It will be seen by the statement of James Cameron that Mullins was violent on the way to the station, and the P.C. had to use force, which may account for a slight redness inside the lip when shown to Inspector Wheeler. When the charge was accepted Mullins did not deny anything, all he complained of was that he had been assaulted by P.C. 383 Morgan while at the station. P.C. 58 Hunt and 402 Saunders, who were on reserve, saw no assault take place at the station, and I am sure if they had they would have admitted it to the Inspector, as they are both very reliable men. He only complained of one blow at the station; when giving evidence he said he received two. The Inspector and P.C.'s absolutely deny that Mullins requested that another constable take him to the cells. Prisoners are always conveyed there by the gaoler.

Mullins has not confined himself to the truth. P.C. Morgan absolutely denies that Mullins struck him on the shoulder, and he did not hear the remark about "at the earhole again," but one of the witnesses (Sims) states that he did hear the word earhole said by Mullins.

P.C. Morgan is not over intelligent. If he had cross-examined Mullins when asked by the Magistrate, I have no doubt no comment would have been passed by the Magistrate. Inspector Wheeler wished to put a question, through the Magistrate, but he would not allow it.

There is no doubt that Mullins was the worse for drink when he was taken to the station, and the Inspector accepted the charge, which was his only course under the circumstances, as the prisoner did not deny it. When he was examined by the Divisional Surgeon some half an hour later he certified him as recovering from the effect of drink.

I submit the absence of complaint by the prisoner to Inspector Wheeler, of what occurred in the street shows that his evidence in front of the Magistrate was an afterthought and unreliable.

To Arthur Harding,

of 10, Gibraltar Gardens, Bethnal Green.

Information has been laid this day by Michael Cann, P.C. 47HR, for that you, on the 12th day of September, in the year one thousand nine hundred and six, at Sclater Street, within the district aforesaid, did unlawfully assault and beat one Michael Cann, a constable of the Metropolitan Police Force, then and there in the execution of his duty as such constable.

You are therefore hereby summoned to appear before the Court of Summary Jurisdiction, sitting at the Old Street Police-court, on Tuesday, the 25th day of September, at the hour of two in the afternoon, to answer to the said information.

Given under my hand and seal this 18th day of September, one thousand nine hundred and six.

(Signed) H. C. Biron,

One of the Magistrates of the Police-courts of the Metropolis.

With reference to the attached form 122,

I beg to report that at 12 night, 12th inst., P.C. 47HR Cann arrested two men named Stephen Williams and Charles Callaghan for disorderly conduct and assaulting him at Bacon Street, Bethnal Green, and, while taking the prisoners through Sclater Street, on the way to station, Arthur Harding, who is well known to the police-constable, suddenly stepped out from the crowd and struck him on the left ear with his fist and ran away.

The police-constable was subsequently seen by Dr. Clark, divisional surgeon, who stated he was suffering from a lacerated wound on ear, and dressed same.

The prisoners Williams and Callaghan appeared before F. Mead, Esq., at Old Street Police-court, on the 13th inst., and were sentenced to one and four months' hard labour respectively.

The police-constable was unable to arrest Harding at the time, and I respectfully suggest that he be summoned.

J. Hewison, Sub-Divisional Inspector.

Summons recommended,

J. Monk, Acting Superintendent.

EXTRACT

From "The Telegraph" of 27th September, 1906.

Complaints against police of the H Division formed a serious feature of the hearing of a summons at Old Street, against Arthur Harding (or Tresseden), charging him with having assaulted Police-constable 47HR in the execution of his duty.

The constable's evidence was that on midnight on the 12th inst., when he was taking a prisoner to the station, the man becoming violent in Sclater Street, Bethnal Green, Harding, from among the crowd, struck witness a blow on the ear. Witness said he had just handed his prisoner over to another constable when he received the blow, but he did not at once take the defendant in charge. He explained that by saying he was partly exhausted by the struggle with his prisoner, and that he knew defendant, and called out to him, "All right, Harding, I know you."

Police-constable 164H went to the assistance of Police-constable 47HR, and saw Harding attempt to take the prisoner away from custody. Defendant struck the constable on the ear.

Police-constable 207H gave evidence of assisting with the violent prisoner, and saw defendant strike 47HR "with his left fist" a deliberate blow.

Defendant, going into the witness box, gave evidence that he was in a public-house when, hearing a noise, he and others went to the door and saw the police with the man in custody. He denied going near them. He admitted calling out, "Don't hurt the man," or "Don't murder the man," and he heard one of the constables call back, "All right, Harding, we'll have you for this." He said he had at times been to the station, when he had seen the police ill-treat a prisoner, and that was how he was known, as he had been working in the neighbourhood five years. He added that the police often tried to "get him in" for something, and he had been taken fifteen or sixteen times, but let go. Recently, when selling lemons, he had been arrested and taken to the station to prove he had not stolen them. He had been taken out of bed and away from his meals, stopped in the street, and then let go, and if seen carrying a parcel was walked off to the station to prove where he had got it.

Mr. Cluer: Why?

Defendant: Because I was in a little trouble two years ago, but have kept to work since.

Three witnesses were called for the defence, all agreeing that defendant never moved from the public-house door when the crowd passed, and that he returned to the bar without "running away."

The Magistrate did not think he ought to convict defendant on the summons. There could be no doubt that Police-constable 47HR was assaulted, and believed by defendant, but defendant's witnesses, and particularly the manager of the tavern, proved conclusively that he never went to the crowd or the constables.

Defendant: May I ask what protection I have against the police?

Mr. Cluer: Your best protection is a Magistrate at this court.

With reference to the attached newspaper extract, I beg to report that at 11.55 p.m. on the 12th September, '06, P.C. 47HR Cann had occasion to arrest Stephen Williams, a flower seller, and Charles Callaghan, a bookmaker's clerk, at Bacon Street, Bethnal Green, when they became very violent. The police-constable obtained assistance, and proceeded on the way to the station, when in Sclater Street an attempted rescue was made, and P.C. Cann was struck on the left ear by the man, Arthur Harding, alias Tresaden, who, being well known to police, and owing to the hostile demeanour of the crowd towards the police, it was thought advisable not to arrest Harding at the time. Further assistance arrived, and the two prisoners were brought to station, where they were charged with disorderly conduct and assaulting P.C. Cann. They appeared before T. Mead, Esq., on the 13th inst.; they were sentenced, Williams to one month, and Callaghan to four months' hard labour, after several convictions for larceny and assault had been proved against them.

On the 26th September, '06, Harding appeared in answer to a summons for assault on P.C. Cann, when three witnesses, as shown in the extract, swore that Harding did not leave the door of the King's Arms public-house, Sclater Street, whilst the police were passing through that street with their prisoners. The Magistrate accepted this as a true version of the affair, although three police-constables—viz., 47HR, 164, and 207—all of whom had a previous knowledge of the defendant and were positive as to his identity, and that he committed the assault. I have no reason to doubt the veracity of the police-constables' statements.

With reference to Harding's allegation of police persecution,

It is quite true that Harding has been brought to the station on suspicion of having committed larcenies, but the losers have generally failed to identify him owing to his plan of action after committing an offence of immediately going home and changing his clothing, although at the same time the police have been in possession of reliable information connecting him with some of the cases.

The particular case he mentions, the facts are as follows:—

On the 30th November, '05, P.C. 413 Putt saw Harding at Chilton Street carrying a bag on his back, and, knowing him to be a thief, asked him what the sack contained, when he threw it down and said, "f———g well look." Upon inspection, the police-constable found the sack contained a quantity of onions, which he declined to give any further account of. He was thereupon brought to station, when the case was investigated by P.C. 1 Wiltmott, and on inquiries being made it was found that the onions had been purchased at Spitalfields Market by Harding's mother, when he was allowed to go.

Harding's statement of being in work is not corroborated, and I very much doubt whether he can give a single instance of following any honest employment. He is well known to the whole of the C.I.D. officers at this station, also a large number of the uniform men, as a most slippery and dangerous criminal. He is the leader of a numerous band of thieves, by whom he is feared on account of his various acts of violence. When he is brought before a Magistrate he invariably sets up an alibi, which, in conjunction with a plausible tongue, has resulted in him being discharged on several occasions.

Harding, alias Tresadern, commenced his career of crime at the age of 13, and I respectfully submit herewith a list of charges and convictions recorded at this station:—

10th April, 1901	Suspected person	Discharged.
4th Mar., 1902	Larceny, simple	12 months' hard labour.
10th Mar., 1903	Larceny, person	Discharged.
21st April, 1903	Larceny, person	20 months' hard labour
17th Jan., 1905	Larceny, van	Discharged.
28th May, 1905	Larceny, person	Discharged.
6th April, 1906	Shooting with intent.	Acquitted.
13th April, 1906	Robbery	Discharged.
4th July, 1906	Assault	£5 or one month.

I beg to add that the newspaper extract is substantially a correct account of what transpired at police-court, but is a one-sided report, inasmuch as nothing is said in favour of the police to justify their action.

I further beg to report that, as a result of further inquiry, I have ascertained that Mrs. Harding approached Mr. Rayner, the licensee of the Old Crown public-house, Brick Lane, and requested him to give a facsimile version to that given by Mr. Smith, manager of the King's Arms public-house, Sclater Street, which, although in itself not sufficient to justify process for perjury, is convincing proof that the evidence given by the last named person is not in substance true, and that he supplied the missing link which other more conscientious persons declined to give.

With reference to the attached,

I beg to report that the Commissioners' minute has been noted. Harding is well known to police as one of the most slippery and notorious thieves in this district. His crimes generally consist of larceny from the person, therefore the charges invariably depend on identification, but owing to his rapid change of clothing, etc., this is seldom established.

However, should he again be charged, I am of opinion that legal aid would materially assist in getting this artful criminal convicted.

J. Hewison, Sub-Divisional Inspector.

The Commissioner's directions will be acted upon if this man is again arrested for felony and identified.

MRS. X'S CASE.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Great Marlborough Street Station. C Division.

——, 1906.

Referring to the attached,

I beg to report having had a conversation with Mr. X at the police-court on morning of 21st, while he was waiting for his wife to appear before the Magistrate. He informed me that he is employed by a firm of naval architects, and that he is very often away from home for several days at a time, but usually comes home for the week ends. He could not understand why his wife should have been in Oxford Street on the previous night, as he expected to find her home, as he only arrived that evening from Newcastle, but his wife had assured him that she had been to see a lady friend at Hampstead, and that she was on her way home when arrested. He assured me that he did not know who his wife's friend was, as she declined to disclose her name, but he was sure his wife would not come to Oxford Street again at night.

Mrs. X is a Frenchwoman, very excitable. She did not deny the constable's evidence as to him having seen her speaking to men, but she said they spoke to her first. She said that she had a very great difficulty to explain her conduct to her husband, and when she came into court and saw him she felt faint.

She made no complaint against the police.

The learned Magistrate asked the police-constables if they knew her other than what she represented herself, and they assured him that they did not. Charge sheet marked Discharged, S. 16.

F. Mackay, Sub-Divisional Inspector.

Submitted.—This woman was seen at Regent Circus by P.C. 81C Cole at 10.25 p.m., and was then cautioned as to her conduct towards different men, but although this was done it had no effect. She was seen accosting men at Regent Circus on the same night by P.C. 91C Keeble, and after having been cautioned by P.C. Cole at Oxford Street, was seen shortly after to do the same thing to another man a short distance away in the same thoroughfare by P.S. 29C Shepherd.

Although residing at (Alpha), and to get there should have proceeded, when at Oxford Circus, by way of Regent Street, etc., Mrs. X loiters about Oxford Street and proceeds eastward, which was out of her way home, and continues the conduct she had been cautioned against for over another 20 minutes, until arrested for the offence she was committing.

It is not the first time by many that this woman has been seen doing the same thing in the neighbourhood in question, as will be seen from the constable's and Sergeant Mead's reports attached.

P.C. Cole is a man with 14 years and 9 months service, and not likely to make an arrest of the sort without good cause. That there was good cause for the arrest of Mrs. X, if his statement be true, there can be no doubt. He is not the only officer who saw Mrs. X committing herself on the night in question, and I see no reason to apprehend that any mistake was made by either.

With reference to report called for re charge against Mrs. X,

I beg to report that at 10.55 p.m., 20th inst., P.C. 81 Cole brought Mrs. X, age 39, no occupation, of (Alpha), to this station on a charge of using insulting behaviour, whereby a breach of the peace may have been occasioned, at Oxford Street.

The P.C. stated that he saw the woman stop three men by placing herself in front of and speak to them, which action they resented. As he had previously cautioned her for a similar thing that evening, and had seen her in Oxford Street speaking to men during the past month, he took her into custody.

She was charged, and on my reading it over to her, she replied, "The policeman has made a mistake. I did not insult him. I only spoke to my insurance man. Other men spoke to me."

A message was at once sent to (Alpha) to inform her husband and asking him to attend to bail, which he did at 2.50 a.m., 21st inst.

Mrs. X appeared before G. L. Denman, Esq., at Marlboro' Street Police Court this day, and was discharged by him under Section 16 Summary Jurisdiction Act.

I beg to report that at 10.25 p.m., 20th inst., I saw Mrs. X at Regent Circus carrying a milliner's cardboard box. She remained there some few minutes, looking into gentlemen's faces and smiling at them. She then walked eastward through Oxford Street to Oxford Circus Station. She there approached a man who was standing outside the station, smiled, and spoke to him. I was unable to hear what she said, but I distinctly heard the man reply, "Go away. I don't want anything to do with you," and went into the station as if to avoid her. On seeing me he came back, and said, "These women are a nuisance, constable."

I then went to Mrs. X, and said, "You must behave yourself and not molest people." She replied, "You mind your own business, that was my friend," and walked eastwards to Hill's Place, where she stepped in front of another gentleman who was proceeding in the opposite direction, and, after a short conversation, they walked together to Berwick Street, where they parted, the man returning towards the direction from which he had come. Mrs. X then went to Wardour Street, where she stopped in front of another gentleman. He stepped aside as if to allow her to pass, but she again stepped in front of him. He then placed his hand on her shoulder, giving her a slight push, passed a remark which I was unable to hear, and crossed to the opposite side of Oxford Street. Having had Mrs. X under observation 25 minutes, I went to her and told her that I should take her into custody for insulting behaviour, when she replied, "Give me a chance. I am a married woman, and ought not to be here."

I then took her to the station, where she was charged. In reply to the charge, she said, "The policeman has made a mistake. I did not insult him. I only spoke to my insurance man; the other men spoke to me."

During the past three weeks I have seen Mrs. X in Oxford Street and Regent Street accosting men almost nightly, and on several occasions as late as 12.30 a.m., I have also seen her accompany men to the Dolphin public-house, Oxford Street, and subsequently go away with them in cabs. On two other occasions I have seen her carrying a cardboard box similar to that which she was carrying on the 20th inst. when arrested.

Messrs. Wontner and Sons,

Dear Sirs,—My attention has just been drawn to the case of Mrs. X for the first time since my note was made on ——— last.

I have no recollection of the case—so many others have intervened—but I see at the end of my note of the evidence for the prosecution two uncompleted sentences, viz..—

"Did not see . . . . . .

and

"The week before last . . .

In the copy supplied to you and now shown to me, I see that these two pieces of sentences have been read as running into one, and the word "her," between the two parts, has been pencilled as a suggestion.

That reading is not that which I adopt. I have no doubt that I was interrogated at my desk, so that I lost the latter part of the sentence commencing "Did not see . . . . ." and that I waved aside the interruption and proceeded to take the next answer from the witness, when the interruption, persisted in, caused me to lose the latter part of the last sentence also; and I imagine that I had no opportunity of recovering the lost words until the discharge of the defendant seemed to render it difficult—(if apparently necessary) —to get the constable back in the box for the purpose.

At all events, my "T" in "The week before last" is my capital "T," and I have no doubt that the words are part of a new sentence.

If the copy of the notes supplied to you had been referred to me my instruction to the copyist would have been to ignore the two uncompleted sentences, as amounting to nothing, and that is the only interpretation of them which I think it is right to adopt.

I am told that the notes were asked for and supplied in a hurry during my absence, and no doubt that also accounts for the fact that in the copy of the note supplied to you the evidence of Mr. X taken on the back of the page in my note-book had been overlooked and altogether omitted.

I much regret that you should have been misled by your copy, and that the interruption to my note should render my note less useful to the Commission than it would otherwise have been.

I remain, dear Sirs,

Yours faithfully,

STANLEY SAVILL.

22nd November, 1906.

I beg to report that at 11.30 p.m. 21st November, 1906, whilst on duty at Old Gravel Lane, Wapping, I saw James Riley drunk, making use of obscene language, and quarrelling with another man in Old Gravel Lane, opposite Prusom Street. A large crowd of persons assembled round the men as they were quarrelling. I requested Riley to go away several times, but he would not do so, and I arrested him. Whilst taking him through Prusom Street on way to the station, when opposite Choppings Court he tripped me, and we fell to the ground together, where he struggled with me for several minutes. P.C. 322 (Kemp) came to my assistance, and, after getting up from the ground, I noticed that prisoner's right eye was swoollen (sic), but I am unable to say whether it was caused before I arrested him or when he fell with me in Prusom Street. I did not assault him, and neither did I see any other person do so.

With reference of James Riley, charged with drunkenness, etc.,

I beg to report that at 11.30 p.m., 20/11/06, I was on duty in Old Gravel Lane, when I saw a large crowd at the top of Prusom Street. On going towards them I saw P.C. 134 H (Mizen) turn the corner into Prusom Street with prisoner, and then I next saw prisoner trip police-constable up, and they both fell to the ground, and were struggling very violent. I then helped police-constable to his feet, and both of us brought prisoner to the station. On way to the station I noticed that Riley's right eye was swoollen (sic). I did not strike him myself, or see P.C. 134 H (Mizen) strike him.

I beg to report that at 11.45 p.m., 21st inst., James Riley, age 22, of No. 21, Lowder Street, St. George's, E., labourer, was brought to above station by P.C.'s 134 H (Alfred Mizen) and 322 H (Thomas Kemp) for being drunk, disorderly, and making use of obscene language at Old Gravel Lane, parish of Wapping.

The prisoner was suffering from a contused right eye, when I called Dr. Grant, Divisional Surgeon, who attended and dressed the injury, and certified as follows:—"Called at 11.50 p.m. to see Jas. Riley, suffering from contused right eye. Intoxicated. Fit to be retained.—(Sd.) C. Graham Grant."

Prisoner was asked how he got the injury, when he replied "The constable did it," pointing to P.C. 134 H (Mizen).

I then asked the constable if he could account for the injury, when he replied:—I found the man drunk, quarrelling with another man, and making use of obscene language, and causing a crowd to assemble, and as he would not go away, I took him into custody, and whilst bringing him through Prusom Street, on the road to the station, opposite Choppen's Court, the prisoner tripped me up and tried to get away. P.C. 322 H (Thomas Kemp) then came to my assistance, and we brought him to the station, and that he prisoner may have had the injury previous to the arrest, or it may have been done in the struggle whilst on the ground. He was then charged, when he denied the drunkenness, and Dr. Grant (Divisional Surgeon) examined him and certified him drunk.

He was bailed at 7.30 a.m. 22nd inst., and appeared before J. Dickinson, Esq., Magistrate, at Thames Police Court, at 10 a.m., same date, when Edward Sweeney, of Wapping, attended on his behalf, and gave evidence to the effect that he saw the constable—viz., P.C. 134 H (Mizen)—strike the prisoner whilst in Prusom Street.

I afterwards attended police court, and gave evidence of what I knew of the case when the Magistrate read a letter which he stated he had received on behalf of the prisoner, as follows:—"97, High Street, Wapping, E., 22nd November, 1906.—Mr. F. W. D. Sedgwick wishes to state that when in the Old Gravel Lane last evening, between 11 and 11.30 p.m., he saw the affair in connection with which James Riley was arrested. Riley was undoubtedly quarrelling with another man, and shouted, but he did not then have the injury to his face, which must have been caused later. Mr. Sedgwick would have liked to appear to give evidence for J. Riley, but has to be at the Stock Exchange this morning."

Prisoner was then asked by the Magistrate if he should deal with the charge of drunkenness against him or be remanded on bail till 11 a.m. Saturday, 24th inst., for the attendance of Mr. Sedgwick, when he replied that he wished to be remanded, which was done.

The Magistrate then requested me to warn Mr. Sedgwick, also Dr. Grant, to attend police court at 11 a.m. on Saturday, 24th inst., which will be done.

As this appears a case where police action may be questioned, I most respectfully ask that Messrs. Wontner may be asked to attend to conduct the case.

R. SANDERS, Inspector.

Respectfully submitted for directions,

J. PICKETT, Sub-Divisional Inspector.

Submitted the prisoner and the police constable fell to the ground when the former tripped the constable up in Prusom Street, on the way to the station, and about 100 yards from where he was arrested.

The writer of the letter to the Magistrate, Mr. Sedgwick, of 97, High Street, Wapping, a stock-broker, has been seen by Insp. Saunders, by direction of the Magistrate, and requested to attend on the remand, but stated he should not attend the court, as he has nothing to add to his letter that the prisoner was drunk and fighting, and the constable was right in arresting him, but he saw no mark on his face at that time, and that he wrote the letter at the request of the prisoner and the man Sweeny, who called on him yesterday morning.

Mr. Sedgwick is a candidate for the Stepney Borough Council at the bye election for Wapping, which takes place 29th inst.

The evidence points to the prisoner having received his injury when he tripped the police constable up and fell with him, except that Sweeney says he saw the police-constable strike the prisoner. He is, however, a man of bad character, and has been charged and convicted for attempted robbery and for assault on police, also for drunkenness.

He did not attend the station, and the constable says he never saw him there at all. He and the prisoner are companions. The divisional surgeon's attention was drawn at the station to the prisoner's allegation that the police-constable had caused the injury to his face. The doctor examined him, and said he did not think the injury was caused by a blow from the fist.

The case is remanded till 11 a.m., 24th inst., as it is possible the prisoner may be legally represented on the remand. I beg to recommend that Messrs. Wontner appear for the police.

I beg to report that on 22nd inst. James Riley, age 22, of No. 21, Lowder Street, St. George's, a labourer, charged at Shadwell, H Division, drunk, disorderly, and using obscene language, P.C.'s 134H Mizen and 322H Kemp in case, was brought up at Thames Police-court, before J. Dickinson, Esq., Magistrate.

The prisoner was suffering from a contused right eye, which he alleged was caused by P.C. 134H striking him. A witness, Edward Sweeney (address unknown), appeared, and stated that he saw the constable strike the prisoner on right eye with his fist, as the prisoner was proceeding to the station. The prisoner was then proceeding quietly between the two police-constables.

A Mr. Sedgwick, Wapping, had written to the Magistrate, stating that the prisoner had sustained no injury to his face when arrested, and the injury received must have been caused after arrest.

The divisional surgeon was called to dress the injury. Prior to prisoner being charged, he informed the doctor that the police-constable had caused the injury.

P.C. 134H stated in his evidence that he did not cause the injury, which might have been caused in struggling with police-constable.

P.C. 322H stated that when he arrived P.C. 134H and prisoner were struggling on the ground. When he picked the prisoner up he saw then that his right eye was swollen. (The prisoner and his witness alleges that the injury was caused subsequent to P.C. 322's arrival.)

The Magistrate heard the evidence of Insp. Sanders, who took the charge, and remanded the prisoner until 24th inst. O.R. in 40s., and directed that the divisional surgeon should attend court on that date to give evidence.

24th November, 1906.

I beg to report having attended the Thames Police-court at 11 a.m., 24th inst., when the case of James Riley, who was charged on remand with drunkenness, etc., was heard by J. Dickinson, Esq., presiding Magistrate.

A Mr. Shepherd, of 79, Prusom Street, St. George's, E., was called by prisoner on his behalf, who stated that he witnessed the assault on Riley by P.C. 134H Mizen. Edward Sweeney also attended again, and the prisoner gave evidence on his own behalf.

On conclusion of evidence Mr. Dickinson said: "After the doctor's evidence, there is no doubt that you were drunk. As to your injury, your witnesses' evidence is contradictory. All I have to deal with is the charge for being drunk. You are fined 2s. 6d."

The prisoner was put back for one day, as he had no money to pay the fine.

GAMBLE'S CASE.

27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

23rd November, 1906.

SIR,—We have just been instructed in the case of George Gamble and we think it right to lay the facts before you in order that the case may be investigated by the authorities. Our client has been in hospital since the assault complained of, and is not yet recovered, but it is proposed to issue process against the police constable complained of as soon as he is able to attend. The facts are shortly as follows:—

On the 21st of August in this year, in Spelman Street, Whitechapel, George Gamble was speaking to a woman named Ethel Griffiths at about 4 a.m., when, after some conversation, the constable knocked George Gamble down and kicked him several times while on the ground. The constable is stated to be aged about 30, with a ginger moustache, and to be No. 207H. George Gamble, in consequence of his injuries, was taken to the hospital, where he has since been an in-patient.

We are, Sir,

Your obedient Servants,

With reference to report called for re alleged assault on Charles Gamlett on 21st August, 1906.

I beg to report being on 10 and 11 beats, second section night duty, which includes a part of Spelman Street, on above date. I do not know the man who have complained; I did not see him, neither did I assault him or know anything of the occurrence.

With reference to the attached correspondence,

I beg to report that there is no record at this station of any complaint being made by Gamble of the alleged assault. I have made careful inquiry at Spelman Street and also at the London Hospital, but I am unable to obtain any information whatever of the occurrence.

The P.C. was on night duty during the month of August last, and was posted to a beat that takes part of Spelman Street, Whitechapel, on the date in question. He, however, absolutely denies all knowledge of the assault.

I would respectfully suggest that the solicitor might be asked to furnish Gamble's address, so that he could be (A) seen with a view to his statement being taken and the nature of the alleged assault inquired into.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Kennington Road Station. L Division.

20th October, 1903.

I beg to report that at 11.30 a.m., 20th inst., Alfred Platt, 7, Bird Street, Brook Street, Lambeth, "bookmaker," called at this station and complained that P.C. 180L Deed had attempted to obtain £20 from him under the following circumstances:—

At 2.40 p.m., 17th inst., the P.C. went to him as he was making a book at Robert Street, Waterloo Road, and handed him a slip of paper on which was written "Oasis, 20s. win, 20s. 1.2.3., any to come, Abanico, 20s. win., 20s. 1.2.3.—Jack." At Platt's invitation they went into a public-house close by, where attention was called to the time, but as public-house clocks are supposed to be a little fast the bet was accepted.

It was afterwards discovered that the horse named was running in a race at 2.15 p.m., and had, in fact, won the race when the bet was made, and, in consequence, Platt refused to pay.

He states the P.C. has called at his house several times asking for the money, which he represented belonged to another person he called the "governor." Platt made various excuses for not paying, and on 19th he made a complaint at Kennington Lane Station.

Arrangements were made for Platt to see the P.C. at 8 p.m., 19th inst., at the Tankard public-house, Brook Street.

At 7.40 p.m. I kept observation and saw the P.C. and another man whom I did not know at the corner of Brook Street. After waiting a few minutes they went up Brook Street. They returned by way of Kennington Road at 8.15 p.m. After waiting for a few minutes outside the Tankard public-house, they entered. At 8.50 p.m. they left the public-house, and at 9 p.m. they went into Lambeth Road with another man, who joined them outside the public-house, and I did not see them again.

At the time the P.C. made the bet he should have been patrolling Kennington Lane Sub. Division, for the purpose of arresting bookmakers.

20th October, 1903.

Statement of Alfred Platt, of No. 7, Bird Street, Brook Street, Lambeth, "bookmaker."

At 2.40 p.m., 17th inst., I was in Robert Street, Waterloo Road, when P.C. 180L came up to me and said, I brought you a bet from the governor; you may as well have it as anybody else. It will do you a bit of good. He gave me a paper with 2 sovereigns. On the paper was written, Oasis, 20s. win, 20s. 1.2.3., any to come, Albanico, 20s. win, 20s. 1.2.3.,

I asked him what races these horses were in. He replied, I do not know. I then invited him into a public-house close by. We went in, and I called his attention to the time by the public-house clock, which was ten minutes to three. I said, These clocks are generally a bit faster on Saturdays and Sundays than on other days, but I will time the paper 2.40 p.m.

On looking at the paper I saw the first-named horse was in the 3.45 p.m. race. I then gave him 5s. and bid him good-day.

At 7.10 p.m., 17th inst., the P.C. came to my house and asked for payment over the winner of the 2.15 race, saying, I want the money to take to the governor. I promised to meet him in 20 minutes at the Two Eagles, Brook Street, but did not keep the appointment.

At 12 o'clock the same night my wife informed me that the man who called at 7.10 p.m. had called again about 8 p.m., and said he wanted the money, as it was not his own, and she told him I was in bed, asleep. She asked what the money asked for referred to. He said, It is over a bet. She said I did not pay out at night, but on the following day, and as the bet was made on Saturday, it would not be paid till Monday.

At 1.15 p.m., 19th, I was at Waterloo Railway Station, where I saw the P.C., who said, You have not been half mucking me about for the money. You make me feel bloody wicked. I promised to meet him in Price's public-house, but did not keep the appointment.

I then went to Kennington Lane Police Station and made a complaint.

At 4 p.m. I was informed by a friend that he had arranged for me to meet the P.C. at the Tankard public-house, Brook Street, at 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. I informed Inspector Knell of the appointment, and he advised me to go home, and no doubt I should hear from someone.

At 8 p.m. the P.C. and another man, whom he had previously represented to be a C.I.D. Sergeant, came to my house. The P.C. said, I have come for the money. I said, Go to the Tankard and wait for me. He said, I'll wait at the corner of the street. I went out almost immediately, and together we went to the Ship public-house, Kennington Road. I told him I had not the ready money to pay him. I could not get a cheque cashed at the Ship, but I could at the Tankard, and told him to follow me there, which both of them did. I entered the saloor bar, and saw them enter the bar on the Kennington Road side. I did not try to get the cheque cashed, and did not go into the bar they were in.

After waiting about a quarter of an hour, they left. I was informed they were waiting outside, and I remained till about 10.30 p.m., when I was informed they had gone. I then went home.

ALFRED F. PLATT.

F. SPENCER, S.D. Insp.

Question by P.C. Where did I meet you at 2.40 p.m.?

Reply. At Mepham Street, near the public-house.

Q. When I met you, did I not say I have got a bet from a friend of mine, not the "governor"?

R. No, you said it was from the governor.

Q. When I saw you at Waterloo Station, did you not say to me, Who is that man there? (pointing to a friend of mine). I cannot get on my pitch, as there are several strangers about. I thought he was a detective.

R. Yes. I asked that question in order to gain time so as not to pay out.

20th October, 1903.

With reference to the complaint made against me by Alfred Platt, 7, Bird Street, Kennington,

I beg to report that at 2 p.m., the 17th inst., I met a friend at Waterloo Road when he told me that he wanted to make a bet, but that he was unable to see a bookmaker. He asked me if I would put it on for him. I first refused, but I afterwards consented to do so. I was afterwards walking along Waterloo Road and opposite the Hero public-house, I saw Platt, as above; I told him that I had a bet for a friend of mine. He replied, All right, I will take it. He took it, looked at it, and replied, one horse is in a late race but the other one is in the race just run. He then said, if there is anything to come I will pay you to-night at half-past six. I went to his house at 7.10 p.m., where I saw him. He then said, Wait a few minutes in the Two Eagles public-house. I waited till 8 p.m. but he never came. I then went to his house again, when his wife told me that he had gone to bed, as he had been drinking all the evening. I deny receiving 5s. or any drink from him. I saw him again at 1.20 p.m. on Monday at Waterloo Station, when he said, Who is that man who is along with you? Is he a detective? I replied, No, he is a friend of mine. He said, There has been several strangers about here this last day or two, and I thought that they was detectives. He said, All right, go outside Price's public-house in Waterloo Road; I will be there in a few minutes. I waited outside the public-house for two or three minutes; as he did not come I went away, but I told a friend of Platt's that I would see him at 8 p.m. With my friend I went to his place, at Bird Street, where I saw him, when he said, Wait down at the Tankhard public-house; I will be down there in a few minutes. I said, No, we will wait outside here for you. He went back into the house and put on his coat and hat; when he came out again he said, I have not got the ready money on me, but I will change a cheque presently and pay you. We went as far as the Ship public-house, Kennington Road; he then said, I can't change it here, but I can at the Tankard. He said, Come up with me; I said, No, we will follow you up; he then went into the saloon bar, but I and my friend went into the private bar in Kennington Road side. I could see him in the saloon bar, but I never spoke to him; we stayed about 10 minutes. I and my friend then went outside and stayed there about 20 minutes. We then went home.

I further beg to report that I never said my friend was a detective sergent, or that the bet was from my govener. I again deny that I received the 5s. or the drink as he has stated. I am very sorry for what has occured, and I will do my best never to get into such trouble again.

GEORGE DEED, P.C. 180L.

F. SPENCER, S.D. Insp.

STATEMENT of CHARLES TURNER, 5, Wilmington Street, Clerkenwell, cab washer.

About 2.40 p.m. on Saturday, 17th inst., I was standing outside the Hero public-house, Waterloo Road, when I saw a plain clothes officer, whom I know by the nick-name of Patsey, hand to Mr. Platt, a bookmaker, a slip of paper with some money, but I could not say what was the amount, as I was not close enough to see. The officer then walked away and I saw no more of him.

Mr. Platt then turned to me and said, What do you think of this paper? Here has Patsey been and backed the winner after the race had been run.

About 6.45 p.m. the same evening I was in the Tankard public-house, Kennington Road, when the same officer called in and asked me if I had seen Alf, meaning Mr. Platt. I replied, No, and he at once left the house.

Question.—Did the officer enter the public-house with Mr. Platt when he handed him the money?

Answer.—I did not see him. I entered the house immediately alone, and Mr. Platt came in about 10 minutes afterwards and joined me. The officer was not with him.

Superintendent's Observations.

P.C. Deed was employed for four hours on 17th inst. in plain clothes to detect betting at Tyer Street, Lambeth, on account of a complaint being received. He left this neighbourhood, and went to Waterloo Road, more than half a mile away. About 2.40 p.m. he went to a bookmaker named Platt, and made a bet for £2, and handed the money and paper to the bookmaker in Mepham Street, outside the Hero public-house, stating it was for a friend, which was accepted. Platt states that the P.C. then went into the Hero public-house with him and had a drink, and gave him 5s. and timed the betting slip 2.40 p.m. I do not believe the latter part of Platt's story that the P.C. drank with him or received the 5s., as it will be seen by the statement made by Charles Turner that he saw the betting transaction and the constable walked away, and he did not see him enter the public-house, and Platt joined him there shortly after.

After the P.C. had gone he examined the betting paper, and found that the second horse, Albanico, had run in the 2.15 p.m. race and won before the paper was handed to him, and refused to pay out the £20 which would have been due had the bet been genuine and in time.

I have seen the betting slip; it is not in the handwriting of P.C. Deed, and in all probability the paper was obtained as stated by the P.C. in his report from a friend.

Mr. Platt attended my office, 20th, and made the complaint, but said he would not have done so had not he been so annoyed by the constable following him about for the money. Platt is a well-known bookmaker, and has been arrested on a great number of occasions, and on 13th inst. by P.C. Deed and P.C. Seer.

The man who gave the betting slip and money to P.C. Deed cannot be found; he is only known by sight to him, and has met with him on a few occasions about the neighbourhood.

P.C. Deed has hitherto performed his duty very well, and has been engaged on special observation on this and other divisions respecting betting, and I cannot understand why he was so foolish as to bet under such circumstances for a man he knew practically nothing about.

With reference to attached correspondence,

I beg to report that on 24th inst., Harry Chapman, of 72, Cornwall Road, Lambeth, appeared before C. M. Chapman, Esq., Magistrate at Southwark Police Court, on four summonses taken under the bye-law of the London County Council for frequenting and using Milan Place, Doon Street, Lambeth, for the purpose of bookmaking, on 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th inst.

The witnesses in the case were P.C.'s 204L Soer and 180L Deed. I was, however, unable to call the latter, he having been dismissed the Force vide P.O., 23rd inst.

Defendant was defended by Mr. Conway, solicitor, who asked for the dismissal of the summonses on the ground that there was no corroboration. I then explained the case to the Magistrate, and told him that observation had been kept by my direction, and that I had initialled the entries in the P.C.'s pocket-books on the conclusion of each day's observation. I produced the pocket-book of ex-P.C. Deed, and after examining it the learned Magistrate stated that a prima facie case had been made out, and he held that the initialled pocket-book produced was corroborative evidence.

Defendant was fined £5 and 2s. costs on each summons.

I beg to report having received the attached Notice of Appeal from Mr. P. C. Conway, solicitor, 81, Rochester Row, Westminster, in the case of Harry Chapman, of 72, Cornwall Road, Lambeth, who was convicted and fined £20 and 8s. costs at Southwark Police Court on 24th ult., for frequenting and using Milan Place, Doon Street, Lambeth, on 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th ult., for the purpose of bookmaking. Con-

To CECIL M. CHAPMAN, Esq., and to Sub-Divisional Inspector SPENCER, L Division, Kennington Road.

Take Notice that Harry Chapman, of 72, Cornwall Road, Lambeth, in the County of London, intends to appeal to the next practicable Quarter Sessions of the Peace to be holden in and for the County of London against a certain conviction bearing date the 24th day of October, 1903, and made by you, Cecil M. Chapman, Esq., one of the magistrates of the police courts of the metropolis sitting at the Southwark Police Court, whereby the said Harry Chapman was convicted as therein, and thereby alleged for that he on the 5th day of October, 1903, at Milan Place, Doon Street, Lambeth, in the said County of London, did unlawfully frequent and use the said public place for the purpose of bookmaking, contrary to the bye-law of the London County Council, etc., and was ordered to pay a penalty of £5 and 2s. costs.

And further take notice that the grounds of the said appeal are:—

That he was not guilty, that the conviction was bad in law, and on other grounds sufficient to sustain this appeal.

To the Commissioner of Police.

Sir,—Respecting the statement I made of P.C. 180L, who has been dismissed from the force through the facts of my statement.

I beg to state the complaint I made against the other three P.C.s, viz., 204L, 203L, and 209L, which was in the presence of Supt. Novice and Inspector Spencer at Kennington Lane. The above officers was in the habit of receiving of me a weekly wage, and, moreover, they never fairly arrested me in my occupation as a street bookmaker. That was always prearranged as to what time they should come and take me into custody, which in the Charge Book will prove I was only charged between the hours of 2.30 p.m. and 3 o/c p.m.

It moreover has come to my knowledge the other three officers as above mentioned have not been punished or reprimanded, so I am sure you will give the matter your kind investigations, and act as you may think proper in the matter as regards the truth of my statements.

Apologysing for occupying your valuable time.

I am, Sirs,

Yours respectfully,

I arrested Platt in the name of Alfred Smith, 27, Oakley Street, on the 1st August, 1903, in Robert Street, witnessed by P.C. 209.

I again arrested Platt in the name of Smith in Robert Street, 28th August, 1903, witnessed by P.C. 209.

I again arrested Platt in the name of Smith in Robert Street, 13th October, 1903, witnessed by P.C. 180 Deed.

I was also in company with P.C. 203, 29th May, 1903, when Platt was arrested in the name of Alfred Smith. I deny the allegation laid against me by Alfred Platt of receiving money from him and making arrangements for the time to arrest him.

I beg to report that I have been employed in plain clothes for four hours daily on all the principal race days during the months of June, July, August, and September, in company with P.C. 204 Soer. I have never arrested Platt for betting, but witnessed his arrest on two occasions by P.C. 204 Soer, viz., 1st and 28th of August, 1903. On the 28th of August I arrested a man in Robert Street who was employed by Platt, and when charged gave the name of Mansell, but said by Platt to be his brother.

I emphatically deny the allegation laid against me by Platt of having received money from him, or having pre-arranged a time when we should arrest him.

With reference to allegation laid by Alfred Platt of receiving money from him weekly during the summer.

I beg to report I was not employed in plain clothes more than two weeks during that time. 29th May, in company with P.C. 204L Soar, I arrested Platt (who then gave name of Smith) at Robert Street, Waterloo Road, at 1.15 p.m., when he said: I wish you had come half an hour later, as I have someone coming about half-past one who will do me some good. Can't you go away for half an hour, and then come back; I will be here? I replied: You will go with us now. I most emphatically deny taking any money from him at any time, and have not spoken to him since.

Referring to allegation made by A. Platt, bookmaker, of 7, Bird Street, Lambeth, of having given 10s. to two P.C.'s in the charge room at this station on 13th October last,

I beg to report that at 2.45 p.m. on 13th October last I was in charge of this station when the above bookmaker was brought in by P.C.'s 180 Deed and 204 Soer, on a charge of obstruction by betting. I at once took the charge, and sent him to police-court. No complaint was made to me, and no such transaction took place to my knowledge.

With reference to attached correspondence,

I beg to report that Alfred Platt has been charged at this station, in the name of Alfred Smith, with bookmaking on four occasions during the present year—viz., on 29th May, at 1.45 p.m., by P.C. 203 Powell, when he was fined £1; on 1st August, at 2.45 p.m., by P.C. 204 Soer, when he was fined £5; on 28th August, at 2.30 p.m., by P.C. 204 Soer, and fined £5; and on 13th October, at 2.45 p.m., by P.C. 204 Soer, and fined £5.

The place where the arrests were made—viz., Robert Street—is at least 15 minutes' walk from the station, and the above times are the times of arrival at the station.

The assertion that he had paid a weekly wage to various police-officers was made as stated, and he further stated he kept a diary in which the particulars were entered. He was invited to produce the diary, so that the necessary particulars as to numbers, names, etc., might be copied for investigation; but he declined.

When he made his complaint at Kennington Road Station, which I took down, I again invited him to tell all he knew; but he declined to give particulars, but made sweeping allegations against police generally.

Beyond the allegation of betting by P.C. 180 Deed (which was admitted by the P.C.), he went on to say that he had given the P.C. 5s. commission, and had paid for drink in a public-house for him. This was proved beyond all possible doubt to be untrue.

He also stated that when charged on 13th October he handed 10s. to two P.C.'s in the charge room. This also is absolutely false.

He has vacated the position he used to occupy, and one other man has been arrested there for the same offence, but he cannot be connected with Platt.

There have been 27 other bookmakers arrested during the present year, some several times, and principally by the P.C.'s mentioned, and no such complaint has been made by any of them.

F. SPENCER, S.D., Insp.

H. NOVISS, Supt.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Respecting attached,

I beg to state that when Platt made his complaint against P.C. 180L Deed, who was dismissed vide P.O. 23rd October last, he made a sweeping allegation against police generally, stating that it cost him £3 10s. per week to pay them all. I invited him to mention any case, which he refused to do. He then said: I have notes in my pocket-book. I asked him to let me see it, which he refused, and stated: I have no further complaint to make.

In his complaint against Deed he stated that he gave him a drink and 5s. at the time he had the bet. He produced a witness, Charles Turner, who saw P.C. Deed make the bet; but this man said Deed walked away, and did not go into the public-house as Platt alleged. This proved that Platt's statement was false with respect to the drink and the 5s., which he alleged took place inside the Hero public-house.

The three P.C.'s complained of have arrested or assisted to arrest Platt, alias Smith, and the times of arrest vary from 1.45 to 2.45 p.m. On each occasion he pleaded guilty, and made no complaint at the station when charged to the officer on duty.

Platt is a low-class man, and his associates are the same.

P.C. Deed was dismissed for improperly leaving his patrol and making a bet with a bookmaker whilst specially employed keeping observation to detect betting.

The facts were admitted by the P.C.

The complaint is undoubtedly made through spite against the three constables, who have done excellent work in respect to street betting, and have clean records.

I have no doubt that Platt's object of complaining is to intimidate police from doing their duty, as no other officers only those mentioned in the complaint have been employed on this duty on Kennington Road Sub-division.

To the Commissioner of Police.

Dear Sir,—I beg to state that on the 19th October, '03, I made complaint to Superintendent Novice and Inspector Spencer concerning P.C. Deed 180L, on a charge of backing a horse that had already won a race. I am a bookmaker, and the said constable gave me a betting paper on a race twenty-five minutes after that race had been won.

He called at my house and demanded the money during the evening. My statement was taken down by Inspector Spencer, in the presence of P.C. 180L.

At the same time I lodged a complaint respecting (P.C. 180L, P.C. 204, P.C. 203, and P.C. 209, all of the L Division), to whom I had been in the habit of giving a weekly wage. I had never been caught betting fairly, as I was always taken into custody at a fixed time by previous arrangement with the above officers. This took place between 2.30 and 3 o'clock p.m., so as to take me before the magistrates the same day. A reference to the charge book will prove the above assertion.

Mine is not an isolated case, as I know several bookmakers who give a regular weekly salary, and who made the same arrangements as myself with regards to being taken into custody.

In writing you this letter, acquainting you with the above facts, I feel confident you are not aware of such conduct in the Police Force.

Hoping you will make special enquiries into the truth of my allegations.

I beg to remain, Sir,
Yours obediently,
A. F. Platt.

P.S.—P.C. 180L has been dismissed the Police Force, but the other officers have not been punished in any way up to the present.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of reply to my letter of the 19th inst., but I did not receive a reply to mine of the 25th inst., as I am now determined to have the matter fully investigated and the officers punished as they ought to be, if they are not, I shall certainly expose the facts in the Press, as I think it is a great scandal to the Force and the public.

I have no ambition in any way to dictate to you, but doubtless you will fully agree with me in having the matter fully investigated.

Sir,—I wrote to you on the 2nd inst. and also on the 24th inst., respecting my complaint relative to the conduct of certain constables of the L Division, and have received no reply thereto on the first mentioned date and registered my first letter.

I also wrote on the 19th inst., and received a formal reply simply acknowledging receipt of that letter, and giving the number quoted at the head of this.

I have to say I fully intend is that my complaint properly investigated, and if I do not receive a prompt reply to that effect from you I shall lay the whole facts before the Home Secretary.

I beg to report that on 28th November, 1903, about 3.30 p.m., whilst on duty at Southwark Police Court, a Mr. Platt asked me what time Thomas Farrington would be taken away by the van in the event of the fine not being paid. I answered, 4.45 p.m. (Farrington having been fined for frequenting streets on L Division for the purpose of betting). Platt said, Thank you, this is another bit of their wickedness, but I shall want to know from the Commissioner yet why that 204 (and some other number he also mentioned) are still wearing that uniform, same time pointing to my uniform. As he walked out he said, I am in communication with my member of Parliament.

I beg to submit the following additional particulars with reference to the complaint of Alfred Platt.

On 24th October last, Harry Chapman, of 22, Cornwall Road, Lambeth, was fined £20 and 8s. costs at Southwark Police Court for frequenting and using Milan Court, Doon Street, Lambeth, for the purpose of bookmaking.

He has appealed against that conviction, and since then he has done little or no betting himself, but has employed one, Thomas Farrington, to do it for him.

Observation was kept upon Farrington and he was summoned for frequenting and using Cornwall Road,

Lambeth, on 11th, 12th, and 13th ult., for the purpose of betting. He appeared at Southwark Police Court on 28th ult., before G. Paul Taylor, Esq., to whom I explained the circumstances, and was fined £15 and 6s. costs. (P.S. 37L Copping in case.)

Since the conviction of Chapman, Platt has frequently been seen in company with Chapman's father, and I have reason to believe he is helping to find the money with which to prosecute the appeal.

When Farrington was summoned, Platt was in court and heard the case. He then inquired of P.C. 168M Lewis, who is door-keeper at Southwark Police Court, at what time Farrington would be taken away in the event of the fine not being paid. Lewis told him. Platt then said, "This is another bit of their wickedness, but I shall want to know from the Commissioner why 204" (who was then in court with another case), "and another P.C. whose number P.C. Lewis is unable to recollect, are still wearing the Police uniform."

Report from P.C. Lewis attached. Platt then left the court, but returned shortly afterwards and paid the fine.

Submitted F. Spencer, S.D. Insp.

The complainant Platt is still a H. C. driver, badge No. 4350; the particulars of his convictions have been sent to the P.C.O.

I have seen the P.C.'s mentioned and closely interrogated them, and I do not believe Platt's complaint. In fact his brother-in-law P.C. 340L Smith informed me that he is of a lying disposition, and does not care for him for such.

No doubt he is interested in the appeal case referred to in this report, which is for hearing in January next. The witness is P.C. 204 Soer, one of the constables complained of, who has done excellent work.

I would ask you if you would be good enough to accord me an interview, when I can enlighten as to the whole merits of the case, most likely to the better effect, than by correspondence. I presume you are acquainted with the fact that an appeal will be heard at Newington Sessions early in January next, when the whole of the circumstances will be gone through. 15th January, 1904.

With reference to attached correspondence,

I beg to report that the appeal of Harry Chapman, of 72, Cornwall Road, Lambeth, against the convictions, by Cecil M. Chapman, Esq., on 24th October, 1903, for unlawfully frequenting Milan Place, Doon Street, Lambeth, for the purpose of bookmaking, on 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th October, 1903, for which offences he was fined £20 and 8s. costs, came on for hearing before the Justices at South London Sessions House, Newington, 15tr inst., W. R. McConnell, Esq., Chairman.

The evidence given at police court by P.C. 204L Soer was repeated by him, and the severe cross-examination of Mr. G. Elliott, who appeared for appellant, failed to shake his evidence. Mention was made by counsel of the dismissal of ex-P.C. Deed, who had kept observation, in conjunction with P.C. Soer, on the appellant, and Alfred Platt, on whose complaint Deed was dismissed, was put into the witness-box and repeated the allegations he had made against Deed and other officers, including P.C. Soer.

I informed the Court that these allegations had been investigated, and with the exception of the case of Deed, found to be groundless.

Chapman, the appellant, was not put into the witness-box, but his counsel seemingly relied for the success of his case on the evidence of Platt, but evidence was brought forward to show that Platt and the father-in-law of the appellant had endeavoured to induce ex-P.C. Deed to come to the Court and say what was untrue with regard to arrest of bookmakers and alleged blackmail. Deed, however, declined to do so, and acquainted me with the facts, which I took down and produced.

The Court adjourned to consider their verdict, and after a few minutes' absence, returned into court, and the Chairman announced that the Bench were unanimous that the convictions should be affirmed, with costs.

To the Home Secretary.

Sir,—I wish to bring to your notice a complaint I made against four constables of the "L" Division on the 19th October, 1903, respecting their endeavouring to obtain moneys of me by fraud. One of the said constables has been dismissed from the force, the other three being allowed to remain in uniform instead of being punished. I wish to state I was street betting, and was convicted of the offence. Since lodging my complaint I had to follow my original occupation as hackney carriage driver. As I have a young family of five to support. At the expiration of my licence I applied for its renewal, and am refused by the Commissioner of Police with no reason, only (I should know what for). I am steady and respectable, and desire to support my family, which now I am totally at a loss to know what course to persue to do so. I think if I am in the estimation of the Police a unfit party to hold a licence those Constables are not fit and proper men to wear the uniform which the Ratepayers pay for.

I trust, Sir, you will at your convenience cause the matter to be investigated as to the harsh treatment I am now receiving at the hands of the Commissioner of Police, who is preventing me from earning support for my young family.

I may mention I have also laid the facts of my case before thhe Hon. Member for N. Lambeth (F. Horner, Esq.).

I am, Sir,
Yours respectfully,
(Signed) Alfred Platt.

New Scotland Yard, S.W.,
24th March, 1904.

Sir,—With reference to the Home Office Papers No. 116,732, herewith returned, I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of the Secretary of State, that Alfred Platt was refused a hackney carriage driver's licence in February last because he had been convicted at Southwark Police Court for street betting four times in the preceding year. On the first occasion he was fined £1, but on the other three the full penalty of £5 was inflicted.

The man has made several allegations against the police, which, when investigated, have been proved in most cases to be without foundation. One of the constables, however, of whom he complained, has been dismissed for improperly leaving his patrol and making a bet with a bookmaker whilst specially employed in keeping observation to detect street betting.

The other complaints seem to have been made with a view to intimidating the police from doing their duty in the matter of keeping watch for street betting, as the officers against whom the allegations were made were men of clear records and good service, and no evidence could be obtained to support the man's statements.

I think, Sir, you will concur with me, and conclude I am very harshly treated at the hands of the Commissioner of Police.

With reference to attached,

I beg to report that ex-P.C. Deed is still residing at No. 1, Campbell Buildings, Westminster Bridge Road. He is employed on early mornings as a porter at Farringdon Market, and later in the day he works for a greengrocer named Leader, at Hercules Road, near this station.

Observation has been kept, but the allegation in attached letter cannot be substantiated.

A man named Burnett has been arrested for book-making at this road, and has recently moved to another street, where he will probably be again arrested or summoned.

Platt, the writer of attached letter, took an active part in the appeal case of Harry Chapman, convicted of street betting, which conviction was affirmed, and he is vindictive towards police as well as towards ex-P.C. Deed.

Referring to the attached,

I beg to report that P.C. 204 Soer was employed with P.S. 6L Farndon four hours daily during week ended 22nd ult., with my authority.

The constable is an excellent policeman, and has done more than any other constable in the division to suppress street book-making. He has had several arrests while in uniform for this offence.

I have not used him for this duty since the former complaint until this occasion. He has my confidence and that of his officers.

Police are changed weekly for this duty, and P.S. and P.C. work together.

Platt has a grievance against this constable because the appeal in which he was so much interested went against his friend Chapman.

It came to my knowledge at the time of the appeal that Platt threatened P.C. Soer what he would do if he had an opportunity. This is the reason I have not used him for this duty before.

Platt is still making a book, but not on this division.

MINUTE OF VISIT OF PLATT TO NEW SCOTLAND YARD ON 13TH JUNE, 1905.

Mr. Platt called this morning, and wished to see Commissioner.

He complains of not being granted an interview by Commissioner or Supt. Noviss, also that he has had no acknowledgment of his letter. He says he is being watched and followed by police, and his business—money lending—interfered with.

He evidently entertains a very vindictive feeling towards police, and said that he would spend all his money, if necessary, in endeavouring to show them up.

I told him that as he had written to Home Office, he must look to them now for a reply.—W. H. K., 14/6/05.

SIR,—I wish to acquaint you that since my last communication to you my house and person has been kept under observation by police officers of the L Division. On the 13th and 14th inst., I was followed for three hours by two plain clothes officers, and on calling at Kennington Lane Police Station at 9 a.m. and 5.45 p.m. of the 14th inst., was refused interviews with Superintendent Novice to report such facts, and was told by inspector on duty that the above facts was pure imagination on my part. At 10.30 a.m. on the 14th inst., I called at New Scotland Yard and saw the Chief Clerk to the Commissioner of Police, and acquainted him of having noticed these police officers following me about on the 13th instant, which he thought was my fancy. At 12.55 p.m., on the 14th inst., I noticed the two police officers close to my residence, which on leaving they continued to follow me till 3 p.m., when I walked into Kennington Road Police Station, leaving them outside, and reported the facts to the inspector on duty, and calling his attention to the time I entered the station. I beg to report having searched the records at Somerset House with a view to ascertain if Alfred F. Platt is registered as a money-lender.

There is only one person named Platt registered, and the Christian names in that case are "Edward Rowland." I also ascertained that no person whose proper name is Alfred F. Platt is registered to carry on a money-lending business in any other name. If, therefore, it can be proved that Platt (who is described as "A. F. Platt, clothier and draper," and "Platt and Co., soap manufacturers and agents," 7, Bird Street, Kennington, S.E.), is a money-lender, he seems to come within Sec. 2 (2) of 63 and 64 Vict., c. 51, and is liable to a fine of £100.

Kennington Lane Station. L Division.
23rd June, 1905.

I beg to report that on 14th inst., a man called at this station and asked to see Superintendent. I asked him if his business was of a private nature, and he said, "Tell the Superintendent my name is Platt, and he will see me." I acquainted Superintendent and was directed to attend to him, and take down in writing any complaint he had to make. I then told Platt I would attend to any business on which he had called, and then he said he was an ex-bookmaker and had complained to the Commissioner respecting the conduct of a certain P.C. of this division, and he objected to the P.C. still being on the same duty. I told him that if he had made a complaint to the Commissioner, as stated, the matter would be fully investigated, but that Commissioner would not allow bookmakers, or ex-bookmakers, to arrange the duties of police officers. He then left the station, stating that if he got no satisfaction from the Commissioner he would go to the Home Secretary.

The above is all I was able to elicit from Platt, and he was treated courteously.

F. ROLFE, S.D. Insp.

Submitted, H. Noviss, Supt.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Kennington Lane Station. L Division
22nd June, 1905.

Respecting the attached.

I beg to report that I saw Platt on two occasions during the week ended 3rd inst., standing in the Lower Marsh by a stall. I also received information that he was again making a book. I directed observation to be kept on him to locate him, if possible, on 13th and 14th inst., by P.S. Fardon. He frequented the neighbourhood of Waterloo Railway Station on both days, going from public-house to public-house in that neighbourhood, and the refreshment bars at Waterloo Station. The P.S. had him under observation for about three hours on each day, but saw nothing in the way of betting in the street, and it is not likely that he would do it, as from his letter he knew he was followed by police.

When at court he informed Mr. Kendall that he was now a money-lender. I have had the records at Somerset House searched and find that he is not registered there as such; further quiet inquiries will be made to ascertain if his statement is correct.

He called at Kennington Lane Station on two occasions on the 14th inst., viz., 9 a.m. and 6 p.m., and asked S.D. Insp. Rolfe if he could see me, as P.C. 204 was still on the same duty. I refused to see him and directed the S.D. Insp. to take any complaint he wished to make, but he did not make any. He called again at 6 p.m., and left the attached note.

At 3.15 p.m. the same date he called at Kennington Road Police Station and asked why he was followed by police. Insp. Smith, who was on duty, informed him that he did not know that he was followed, and if he was, what had he to fear if he did not do anything wrong.

I have since ascertained that in the Chapman's appeal case in which Platt figured so prominently, he was urged on by other street bookmakers in the neighbourhood to do all he could against P.C. Soer, as he was a terror to them, and when it came to settling up he was deserted by them and left to pay with Chapman.

When at Kennington Road Station on 14th inst. he informed Insp. Smith that he had seen me in the morning, also the Commissioner and Chief Clerk at New Scotland Yard that day.

H. NOVISS, Supt.

"Drunken and Disorderly Conduct" includes cases under Section 58 of the Police Act 1839, and Section 12 of the Licensing Act, 1872, in which drunkenness is accompanied by disorderly, indecent or riotous behaviour.

RETURN E.—EXTRACT FROM GENERAL ORDERS (1899) AND MEMORANDA re BAIL.

Section XVII.

Bail.

408. Bail, so far as Police purposes are concerned, is the guarantee, under pecuniary liability, to appear, or to produce an accused person to be tried according to law, at an appointed time and place. It is of two kinds:—

(a.) That admitted by a Police Officer.

(b.) That allowed by Judge or Magistrate.

409. As to Police Bail the Inspector or other officer in charge of a Police Station may under the provisions of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1829 (10 Geo. IV. c. 44, s. 9), and the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839 (2 and 3 Vict. c. 47, ss. 70 and 72), admit to bail persons charged with any petty misdemeanour, for which they are liable to be summarily convicted by a Magistrate —such as Drunkenness, Assault, Disorderly Conduct, carelessly doing any hurt or damage, etc., and by Sec. 38 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, 42 and 43 Vict. c. 49, if the person in custody without a warrant cannot be taken before a Magistrate within 24 hours; bail is compulsory for any trifling offence, even a felony not of a serious nature.

410. Bail is by recognisance, either by the principal alone or with sureties. The amount of the recognisance may be fixed at any sum within the maximum penalty for the offence with which the person is charged, but it must depend on the circumstances of the accused and the nature of the offence. Sureties may be called upon to prove that they are householders by their receipts for rates and taxes, or otherwise show that they are persons of respectability and substance.

411. As regards the exterior parts of the Metropolitan Police District, it must be borne in mind that if the case is clearly one to be dealt with summarily, then, although the Police would be legally justified in detaining at a Station an unbailed offender until the sitting of a Court of Summary Jurisdiction, the inconvenience of a lengthened detention at a Police Station for several days is so great as to make it desirable to get a magisterial remand with a view to the intermediate detention in a prison. (Although the power to bail given by Sec. 38 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act is to be borne in mind, the practice generally in the Metropolitan Police District will be exercised under 2 and 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 70.)

412. A person charged with drunkenness, coupled with any other offence for which bail may be taken, may, though still apparently drunk, be admitted to bail as in any other case, if the sureties, on bailing such person, undertake to have him or her sent home or properly taken care of until sober.

[Paragraph 413.—As revised 27th December, 1902.]

413. Persons charged with being found drunk in any highway or other public place may be liberated when sober on satisfactory bail being given, as in the case of all other persons charged with bailable offences.

414. In all cases where persons are charged with an offence, and liberated on recognisance to appear at a Police Court, the form of Notice of recognisance is to be given at the time to each person so liberated, who is to be informed that in the event of non-appearance at the time given and at the Police Court stated in the form, further proceedings may be taken and costs incurred.

415. When persons charged are liberated on bail to appear at a Police Court, and fail to do so, the Inspector on duty is to inform the Magistrate that the person charged does not appear, and not that he does not surrender to his recognisances. On appearance at the Court, the condition of the recognisance is complete. Placing in the dock there, is a distinct act, only to be adopted by direction of the Magistrate.

416. If prisoners in custody for a bailable offence wish to send for bail, and are willing to pay for a messenger or telegram being sent, the officer in charge of the station is to take the necessary steps without delay.

417. If prisoners have no money, and are desirous of being bailed, the necessary expenses of sending for bail will be allowed by Commissioner, there being no object on the part of the Police in unnecessarily detaining in the cells a prisoner who can be legally liberated on sufficient bail being offered. The Police Telegraph is to be used in such cases whenever practicable.

418. In cases in which a prisoner is remanded with the option of bail and desires that his friends may be communicated with by telegram or otherwise, with a view to procure his liberation on bail, the request is to be complied with by the officer on duty, at whatever hour of the day it is made, whether the prisoner be detained at a Police Court or at a Police Station.

419. No bail is to be sent for except with the sanction of the Inspector or officer in charge of the Station, or in charge of the prisoners at the Police Court.

420. If application is made for bail, and not complied with, the cause and other particulars of bail being refused are to be entered in the Occurrence Book.

421. Money or other property is not in any case to be accepted as a deposit in lieu of bail or of the recognisance of the person charged.

422 Bail books are supplied for use at all stations where charges are taken.

423. The attention of all officers on duty at Stations is directed to Sec. 71, 2 and 3 Vict. cap. 47; it enacts that wherever any person charged with felony or grave misdemeanour is in custody of a Constable, when the Police Courts shall be shut, it shall be lawful for the Constable in charge of the Station-house to require persons making such a charge to enter into a recognisance; and, upon refusal, it shall be lawful for such Constable to discharge from custody the person so charged, upon recognisance, with or without sureties.

424. Except in cases of felony and grave misdemeanour, or where a breach of the peace is to be anticipated, bail should as a rule be taken; and where the address of the person charged is known and the offence not of a serious nature, personal recognisances only should be required.

425. The confining in cells is to be avoided as much as possible, and this is to be impressed on all Inspectors and Sergeants whose duty it may be to take charge of Stations.

426. On the failure of any person bailed by the Police to appear at the Police Court when the case is called on, any Police Constable or other Officer attending as a witness is not to wait at the Court unless otherwise specially ordered by the Magistrate. In the event of its coming to the knowledge of the Police that such a person attended at the Court later in the day, the fact is to be mentioned to the Magistrate on the subsequent hearing on a summons or other process connected with the case.

427. When application is made to estreat any recognisance by reason of non-appearance, the defendant must not be treated by the Police as in default until at least one hour from the time mentioned on the recognisance for appearance.

Bail by a Magistrate.

428. In all cases where the Magistrates wish it, the Police are to make the necessary inquiries as to persons offering to become bail.

429. When a Court of Summary Jurisdiction has fixed the amount in which the principal and the sureties (if any) are to be bound, the recognisance need not be entered into before the Court, but may be entered into by the parties before—

(a.) Any other Court of Summary Jurisdiction;

(b.) Any Clerk of a Court of Summary Jurisdiction;

(c.) Any Police Officer in charge of a Police Station; or (d.) Any Governor of a prison, if any of the parties are in such prison.

(Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, Sec. 42.)

NOTE.—By the Bail Act, 1898, where a Justice has power under Section 23 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, to admit to bail for appearance, he may dispense with sureties if, in his opinion, the so dispensing will not tend to defeat the ends of justice.

430. A bail who has reason to fear that his principal is about to abscond, is justified in causing him or her to be re-arrested, in order that he may surrender the individual at the Court at which the bail was taken. To enable him to do so, he is entitled to claim the assistance of the Police, and that assistance may be given without a warrant from a Magistrate; but, if it should be found necessary to break open doors in order to make the arrest, the Police are not to resort to that force without having previously obtained a warrant, which may be procured upon the application of the bail to the Magistrate, who may require an information on oath that the principal is about to abscond, and that his or her arrest cannot be effected without breaking open doors. Upon such an information, the Magistrate of the Court in which the case was originally heard would grant the necessary warrant. If necessary observation might in the meantime be kept on the house in which the principal was supposed to be.

Circular No. 28.

BAIL.

The attention of all officers performing station duty is to be called to their powers as to the granting of Bail, as defined in the General Orders, pages 374-6, and particularly to par. 424 with respect to the taking of personal recognisances where the name and address of the person charged is known, or is given and can be verified, and the offence is not a serious one.

The Commissioner is desirous that a liberal interpretation should be placed on this order, as it is neither necessary nor desirable that in cases of simple drunkenness, sureties should be required when the person charged is known, or gives a verifiable address; nor is it necessary that such persons should be detained for any great length of time if they are sufficiently sober to enter into a recognisance, and relatives, friends or other suitable persons desire to take charge of them.

Memorandum.

Animals, cruelty to (G.O., page 653, pars. 116 to 129), and crime, bail (G.O., pages 374-6, pars. 408 to 427).

Complaint is made that persons charged with cruelty to horses when working them are unnecessarily detained in Police custody, instead of being admitted to bail, and it is to be understood that in every case bail is to be taken whenever possible, the persons own recognisance being accepted, failing a surety, unless the offence is of a serious nature.

Even when a prisoner is not well known, the fact that he is apparently respectable, in employment and furnishes a correct address (which facts can be established by the Police) will generally be sufficient to justify his own bail being accepted.

In many cases it is possible to summon the offenders (under 12 and 13 Vict., c. 92, sec. 2), and this course is to be adopted whenever practicable.

Whenever the facts warrant the adoption of such a course, owner should also be summoned.

Bail by a Magistrate (G.O., page 376, par. 428).

If a Magistrate grants an application for bail to a prisoner, in any case under the charge of an Officer of C.I.D. (C.O.), or in any other case of importance, in the absence of the officer in charge of the case; or if any person is offered as bail, in the absence of such officer, and the inquiry as to responsibility, etc., is made through the Inspector in charge of the Court, the officer in the case is to be acquainted at once by telegram through his Superintendent, and particulars of the persons offered as bail supplied, in case he should know of any objection to them, apart from the question of responsibility.

Inspectors in charge of Police Courts to be so directed.

REVISED PARAGRAPHS 408 TO 426.—16th JUNE, 1906.

BAIL AND RECOGNISANCES.

408. Bail, for purposes of police work, means a guarantee, under a pecuniary liability, to appear in person, or to produce an accused person, at an appointed time and place.

409. The bail or guarantee may be that of the person charged, when it is said to be a "personal recognisance," or it may be an undertaking given by someone else, when it is "recognisance by surety."

410. By "recognisance" is meant the acknowledgment of an obligation, with a condition which is void on the performance of the stipulated act, e.g., a surety has discharged his recognisance when he produces his principal in Court.

411. Bail may be granted; either (1) by a police officer in charge of a station, or (2) by a Court of Justice.

Bail by a Police Officer.

412. The officer in charge of a police station may admit to bail persons in custody without a warrant charged with any offence for which they may be summarily convicted by a Magistrate or Court of Summary Jurisdiction. If it is not, or will not be practicable to bring such persons before the Court within 24 hours, bail is compulsory, except where the offence appears to be of a serious nature. See Police Act, 1829, sec. 9; Police Act, 1839, ss. 70-72; and Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, sec. 38.

413. The amount of the recognisance may be fixed at any sum within the maximum penalty for the offence with which the person is charged, but depends on the circumstances of the accused and the nature of the offence. No bail is to be sent for except with the sanction of the officer in charge of the station or in charge of the prisoners at the Police Court. Money or other property is not to be accepted as a deposit in lieu of bail or of the recognisance of the person charged.

414. In dealing with questions of bail the station officer must necessarily use his discretion, but ordinarily in cases against the Police Acts, Licensing Acts, Cruelty to Animals Act, etc., and other cases of petty wrong-doing and even in trivial felony charges, personal recognisance should be accepted if the name and address (from which the person can be traced) are known, or can be verified as correct.

It must, of course, be understood that if a person is charged with having committed an act which it is deemed probable he would repeat if liberated at once, such a case would not be a suitable one for accepting personal recognisance in lieu of detention or recognisance by surety. Similarly a person brought to the station incapably drunk should be kept in a place of security, viz., a police cell, until sufficiently sobered to take care of himself, when he can be released on personal recognisance, if name and address are known or are verifiable, or he may be released on the recognisance by surety of a friend who undertakees to look after him.

415. Police officers must realise that police cells are intended to be places of detention for use only when no other means exist of ensuring the appearance of the incriminated person before the Court. Their object must be not to confine in cells any persons whose release upon personal recognisance or recognisance by surety can be arranged for, and is under the circumstances of the case an arrangement that may reasonably be adopted.

416. In cases of grave misdemeanour or felonies of a serious nature bail should be refused as a general rule until the Magistrate or Court has had an opportunity of exercising its discretion.

417. It is necessary in dealing with the sureties that their character and position should be considered, in order to judge whether they are likely to secure the attendance of the accused or are merely put up and indemnified by him in order to assist his escape. They should, as a rule, be householders and persons of respectability and substance.

418. In cases where persons are charged with an offence, and liberated on recognisance to appear at a Police Court, the form of notice of recognisance (No. 114) is to be given at the time to the person so liberated, who is to be informed that in the event of non-appearance at the time and at the Police Court stated, further proceedings may be taken.

419. Everything possible must be done to assist a person in custody who desires to send for bail or to communicate with friends. The police telephone or telegraph may be used. If a prisoner is willing to pay for a messenger or postal telegram or cab, the station officer must arrange for this without delay. In short, he is to do all in his power to enable the prisoner to communicate with his friends or to obtain bail, in the most expeditious manner practicable. It often is practicable for a person charged to give corroborative testimony as to the correctness of the name and address he has tendered by producing a letter or letters addressed to himself, a visiting card, or some other paper which he may have about him. Failing this, he can be questioned with the aid of the Post Office or Local Directory, and when the address is situate in another district verification is to be at once obtained by wire through the station concerned. Post Office Directories are supplied to chief stations, and a Local Directory to each station, and they are to be kept in the Inspector's office. If prisoners have no money, and are desirous of being bailed, the necessary expenses of sending for bail will be allowed by Commissioner.

420. If application for bail be made and not complied with, the particulars of the refusal of bail must be entered in the Occurrence Book.

421. On the failure of any person bailed by the police to appear at the Court when the case is called on, the police officer attending as a witness or in charge of the case need not wait at the Court unless specially ordered to do so by the Magistrate. But if it comes to the knowledge of the police that such person attended at the Court at a later hour of the day, the fact should be mentioned to the Magistrate at the first opportunity.

Bail by a Court of Justice.

422. When any person is brought before a Court of Summary Jurisdiction, and the Court has agreed to admit such person to bail, the police are, if so desired, to make the necessary inquiries as to the persons offering to become bail or sureties.

423. When a Court of Summary Jurisdiction has fixed the amount in which the principal and sureties are to be bound, the recognisances may be entered into before:—

(a) Any other Court of Summary Jurisdiction;

(b) Any Clerk of such a Court;

(c) Any police officer in charge of a police station;

(d) Any Governor of a prison, if the parties are in such prison.

424. If a surety or bail for any person has reason to fear that his principal is about to abscond or avoid bail he is justified in causing the re-arrest of such person, and is entitled to claim the assistance of the police, which may be given without a warrant from a Magistrate; but, if it be found necessary to break open doors to effect the arrest, the police are not to resort to force without previously obtaining a warrant, which can be obtained on the application of the surety to the Magistrate, by an information on oath that the principal is about to abscond. Observation should be kept in the meantime on the house in which the principal is supposed to be.

425. If the conditions of recognisance be broken by non-appearance, the recognisance may be forfeited by the Court, and the parties then become debtors to the Crown for the sum in which they are respectively bound. A defendant must not be treated as in default until at least one hour after the time mentioned in the recognisance.

426. When an application for bail is granted by a Court in any case in which an officer of the CO-C.I.D. is responsible, and inquiry is made through the Inspector in charge of the Court as to the sufficiency of security offered by any person as bail, the officer in charge of the case is to be acquainted by telegram or telephone through his Superintendent, with the particulars of the application and the person making it, in case he should have any objection to offer to the acceptance of the bail.

MEMORANDUM ON THE FRENCH POLICE BY THE LATE SIR HOWARD VINCENT.

I.—THE POLICE IN GENERAL.

A.

FRANCE.

1. The Police in the French Provinces is under the general control of the Minister of the Interior. He acts

(a) Through the Préfets of Departments.

(b) Through the Mayors of Municipalities.

(c) Through the Sureté Générale.

(d) Through the Gendarmerie.

2. The Préfet of each Department, nominated by the Minister of the Interior, with a Sous-Préfet for each district, is the administrative chief, responsible for order and for all details of General Police.

3. The Mayor in each commune is the Chief Municipal Magistrate. By the Act of April 5, 1884, he is responsible, subject to the supervision of the Préfet, for the Municipal Police and the Rural Police, as for

The Gardes Champêtres,
The Gardes Forestiers,
The Gardes Particuliers, within his jurisdiction.

4. The Commissaire de Police in each municipality is appointed by the Minister of the Interior. He is under the control of the Préfet and Sous-Préfet as regards General Police, but under that of the Mayor with regard to the Municipal Police whether called

Sergents de Ville,
Gardiens de la Paix,
Appariteurs,

or by any other name. He is both an administrative and a magisterial officer.

If there is more than one Commissaire in a locality, the chief is styled "Commissaire Central."

Judicial proceedings are under the control of the Departmental Procureur de la Republique and his officers, usually styled "Le Parquet."

5. The Sûreté Générale is of ancient foundation. It is the State Police, controlled, under Empire and Kingdom, by a Minister of Police, of whom Fouché was the most celebrated, and under revolutionary committees and republics by a Director-General of Police, sometimes independent, sometimes acting under the Paris Police. It has since 1903 reacquired its independent existence under the sole authority of the Minister of the Interior.

6. The Director of the Sûreté Générale has two brigades of selected officers, besides many Commissaires and Inspectors. His office is divided into five departments. Not the least important of these is that of the Commissaires Spéciaux des Gares, which, instituted so long ago as 1846, enables the Sûreté Générale to keep touch with locomotion throughout France.

7. The Gendarmerie is primarily under the control of the Ministry of War. But it is equally at the disposal of

The Ministry of the Interior,

The Ministry of Justice, and other departments.

But that its twenty-five thousand members represent the highest acme of military discipline and good conduct it would fall to pieces under so many masters.

Its functions are—

(a) Public safety and public order.

(b) The execution of the law.

(c) The protection of rural districts.

(d) Freedom of passage on highways of communication.

The Gendarmerie is magnificently mounted and equipped, and as in Italy and Spain—where they are known as Carabinieri Reali—they have great moral influence on the population.

B.

PARIS.

1. Paris has for long formed a separate and independent police district. Its head is the Préfet de Police appointed by the Government of the day. Under the Second Empire he controlled also the Sûreté Générale.

2. The Paris Police is organised in the following departments:—

(a) The General Secretariat, now under M. E. Laurent, Deputy of the Préfet and appointed by the President.

(b) The Cabinet du Préfet, in two bureaux, the one of four, the other of three sections.

(c) The Private Secretariat.

(d) The Contrôle Général, now under M. Bernard.

(e) The Municipal Police, now under M. Touny, with a strength of 25 Officiers de Paix,

25 Inspecteurs Principaux,
80 Brigadiers.
946 Sous-Brigadiers,
6,820 Gardiens de la Paix (constables) in four classes.

(f) The Direction Générale des Recherches, now under M. Mouquin, Sub-Director of the Muncipal Police, with

(i.) The Service de Sûreté, now under M. Hamard;

(ii.) The Service de l'Identité Judicaire, under the celebrated M. Bertillon, inventor of Anthropometry; and four Brigades, one of which is assigned to anti-anarchist service.

(g) Two Divisions: the first under M. Honnorat with five bureaux and 12 sections; the second with three sections dealing with public health.

(h) The Markets and Slaughterhouses Division.

(i) The Municipal Laboratory.

(j) The Fire Brigade, costing £120,000 a year.

There are also

13 Permanent Commissions and

20 District Commissions of Public Health with nine members each under the local mayor.

It should also be added that there are four Squadrons and three Battalions of the Garde Républicaine who are the Gendarmerie for Paris, and, while under the disciplinary control of the Minister of War, are subject to the orders of the Préfet de Police and the Minister of Justice.

3. The total cost of the Paris Police last year amounted to

Frs. 37,398,995, 56 centimes, say in round numbers £1,496,000.

Of this one-third was recouped from various sources, inclusive of a contribution from the State of 11 million francs (say, £440,000) towards the cost of the Municipal Police.

Except for this, the expense falls on the Paris ratepayers represented by the Municipal Council, between whom, the Police Authorities, and the Ministry of the Interior there is never-ending friction, though temporarily eased by the tactful force of the present Préfet, M. Louis Lepine, G.C.V.O.

4. The Paris Police is mainly recruited from the Army, whose Non-commissioned Officers of over four years' service have, under an Act of 1905, a prior right to four-fifths of the vacancies. No candidate is, however, admitted without special nomination, or who received during military service a punishment of 15 days' imprisonment or a reduction to the ranks. There is a preliminary examination, and the Préfet sees each candidate himself.

5. Candidates are appointed upon probation for a year or longer. If then rejected as unsuitable for police service, the deduction of 5 per cent. for the Superannuation Fund is reimbursed. Pensions are given after 25 years' service, military service counting. There is one pensioner of 75 years' standing still living, the daughter of an inspector killed on duty in 1832.

6. The idea suggested to the Royal Commission and the Chief Constables' Association of a School of Theoretical Police Instruction is carried out almost in its entirety. All recruits attend a Central School on two or three mornings a week for some months, the remaining time being given to practical instruction in the divisions. The Manual written by two Gardiens, MM. Rault et Phélipôt, might be improved on the lines of the Police Code.

7. The system I suggested to the Royal Commission of Flying Brigades is also in force.

There are six Reserve Companies, two or which are always on duty at headquarters to answer any sudden call, and the remainder to furnish men for demonstrations, fêtes, races, traffic regulations, etc.

There is also a Brigade Mobile in plain clothes under the Sûreté which swoops down, now on this quarter, now on that, and makes a somewhat indiscriminate "raffle."

Cycle Police are also attached to each division.

But motor-omnibuses and telephone alarms are not in use, save from station to station.

8. I find also my suggestion to the Commission of dogs as companions and assistants to rural police in course of successful experiment. The system was started at Gand (Belgium), and four collie dogs are now in training at Neuilly-sur-Seine under the Commissaire, M. Simard. They are always muzzled when on beat, but so as to admit of drinking. They attack with the greatest élan, and readily throw a powerful man. They are taught to stand revolver fire, and to jump a 9-foot wall, standing, or out of a window, in pursuit of a burglar.

Their moral effect is likely to be great.

9. The Paris policeman can rarely rise above the rank of Brigadier, the superior posts of

Inspecteur Principal and Officier de Paix (Superintendent)

being filled by competitive examination, to which all ranks of five years' service have access, and in which the Secrétaire de Commissariat (say, Assistant Clerk to the Justices) usually beats all competitors.

Herein as a career the service is inferior to the Metropolitan Police, wherein a man can rise from constable to Superintendent, and occasionally to Chief Constable. This opportunity of promotion within the service, as from force to force, is the greatest attraction in Great Britain to police work for good men, and its invasion should be hedged about with the greatest jealousy.

The detective service in Paris is recruited directly, and transfer from one branch to another unfortunately discouraged.

10. The headquarters establishment of the Paris Police costs £48,000 a year. It is housed like the London County Council in a variety of scattered buildings—difficult to find and more difficult of access, very different to New Scotland Yard.

The pay of the Gardien begins at £76 a year, with an allowance of £4 17s. 6d. for clothing. He has to find his own lodging, a problem even more difficult in Paris than in London.

11. Any more detailed examination of the Paris Police would not here be in place. But I cannot conclude without a word of reference to the vastly improved system now prevailing for the suppression of the "White Slave Traffic" by the Convention at length concluded between the Powers, and in which Great Britain has long been represented by Judge Sir T. Snagge, K.C., assisted at the Conference last year by Mr. F. S. Bullock, C.I.E., Chief Constable of the Criminal Investigation Department, and who is now the sympathetic Central Authority for Great Britain. It would be comparatively easy within a measurable distance of time with a slight extension of this system to clear the streets, to a great extent, of flagrant vice, to the great gain of the wives and daughters of respectable citizens of the middle and working classes. But to that end there must be an accession of practical common sense to Parliament, to the public, and to the Press, which in these hysterical and party-ridden days seems unlikely to enure.

In Paris there are two classes of prostitutes—the Filles Soumises and the Filles Insoumises. The former are furnished with an annual card, showing the dates of the sanitary visits, and which they are bound to produce on demand.

There are also the Maisons de Tolérance under strict regulation.

The instructions forbid prostitutes to form groups, to circulate many together, to pass and repass within a limited area, to provoke lads under 18, to speak to men accompanied by ladies or children, to incite loudly and with insistence, to cause scandal in any way, or to be accompanied or followed by men. The main places of public resort are forbidden.

"Filles" infringing these directions are, say the regulations, to be arrested as quietly as possible and taken before the Commissaire if his office is open, provided the facts are clear and the "provocation à la debauche" is repeated.

The Police are urged "always to observe a bearing in these cases worthy of the dignity of the Administration."

It is needless to say that the fear of becoming "soumise" is a great incentive to decorum both in the professional and unprofessional class.

II.

COMMISSAIRES DE POLICE IN PARIS.

1. Commissaires de Police were established in connection with the French Police by Napoleon the Great in the early part of the last century. They are magisterial officers, passing through the several grades of a regular service, and appointed under the hand of the President of the Republic upon the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior.

2. They have wide powers of a quasi-judicial character as regards arrest, detention, interrogation, and search, in the preliminary investigation of any infringement of the law, under the three heads of

(a) "Crimes,"

(b) "Délits,"

(c) "Contraventions."

They have also various functions under the Civil Code.

3. So far as Paris is concerned, the Commissaires de Police are nominated by the Préfet de Police, and, with their staffs, form part of the establishment under the direction of M. Laurent, Secrétaire Général de la Préfecture de Police.

4. They pass, after nominated competitive examination, through the stages of (a) Secrétaire Suppléant (29 in number at £96 a year).

(b) Secrétaire de Commissariat (84 in number, of whom 36 receive £112, 35 £136, 6 £160, and 7 £176).

(c) Commissaire de Communes de Ressorts, or Suburban Divisions (26 in number).

(d) Commissaire de Paris (84 in number, of whom 78 receive £320 a year, three £280, one £240, and one £400, in addition to fees for various civil services, varying from £40 to £80 a year).

5. Periodical competitive examinations on Law and Practice, written and verbal, are held for promotion to the rank of Commissaire de Police and Officier de Paix, to which Secrétaires de Commissariat, and all persons for over five years in the service of the Préfecture, are admissible. The Secrétaires generally win.

6. The total establishment of the Commissariats de Police in Paris numbers 451 persons, inclusive of 172 Inspectors in plain clothes at from £80 to £132, and 82 Garçons de Bureau at from £72 to £80, costing, with the Inspection of Weights and Measures, £80,000 a year.

7. There are 78 Commissaires de Quartier in the 20 Arrondissements in which the Paris Police District is divided. In the newest Police Stations the office of the Commissaire is adjacent thereto. In the majority it is as near the principal station as practicable. The Commissaire has to find his own lodging in the quartier.

8. Each Commissariat has its

Secretary (and the most important a Secrétaire Suppléant),

Two Inspectors,

One Garçon de Bureau.

9. The Commissaire de Quartier has no disciplinary authority over the Police of the Quartier, except over the two Inspectors attached to him, and such police as may be placed at his disposal upon requisition for any special purpose by the Officier de Paix of the Arrondissement (our Superintendent of the Division).

10. The Commissaires de Banlieue, upon the other hand, are in direct charge of the police of the suburban Commune, there being therein no Officier de Paix.

11. The Commissariats de Police are open to the public every day, except Sundays and holidays, from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Until 5 p.m. the whole staff is on duty. From 5 p.m. to 1 a.m. one Commissionaire is in charge of two quartiers, with one Inspector.

12. There is a similar roster for relief as regards the Secrétaires de Commissariat.

13. The Commissaire de Police is brought into action either

(a) By direct application from an aggrieved person; or

(b) By the Gardiens de la Paix, who have made an arrest.

14. In the latter case the report is taken by the Sous-Brigadier on duty in the station—with a file of men inside the station and a file outside.

After the preliminary entries, the accused is remitted to the cells ("violon").

When sober or sufficiently calm, he is taken to the Commissariat.

The Secretary there inquires into the charge, and if it presents no difficulty makes out the order for the forwarding of the prisoner to "the Depôt" ("Violon Central"), unless it is a case suitable for release on bail (after inquiries by telephone, and, if necessary, by the Inspectors), or one of a simple contravention, in which case he would be eventually summoned. In a complicated case the Secrétaire would refer the case to the Commissaire, who, in any event, is responsible, and has to countersign the order. An accused can always claim to see the Commissaire.

15. The Voiture Cellulaire goes three times a day to the stations on collecting rounds for the depôt.

The papers in the case are simultaneously sent to the "Parquet" or Office of "The Procureur de la République" (an office to which the Attorney-General conjoined to the Solicitor to the Treasury and Director of Public Prosecutions in this country remotely corresponds).

16. In the case of a serious crime the Service de Sûreté (Detective Police), forming under M. Hamard (ranking as a Commissaire de Police), the first division of the Direction Générale de Recherches, is likewise simultaneously communicated with, and a Juge d'Instruction appointed by the "Parquet" to work up the case, with almost unlimited power as regards the detention, examination, interrogation, and period of trial of the accused by the Assize Court.

17. The summons for a "Contravention," such as drunkenness, often takes some weeks in coming home to the accused through the Commissariat, the "Parquet," and the Police.

18. At the depôt serious cases are sent to the cells, but the lighter ones are massed in a common room holding from 50 to 60. The female department, similarly organised, is under the charge of Sisters. In theory, and as a rule, the ordinary depôt cases go, according to the directions of the Parquet based on their gravity, either

(a) To the Tribunal de Simple Police ;

(b) To the Tribunal Correctionnel, of which there are three or four chambers of three Judges each with power up to five years' imprisonment ;

(c) To the Assizes, all held in or near the Palais de Justice and connected with the depôt.

19. From the depôt prisoners are remanded, as a rule within 24 hours, to the Prison de la Santé in the case of men, and to St. Lazare in that of women.

20. There are also four Divisional Commissaires, to each of which five Arrondissements are assigned, with the charge of a reserve company of Gardiens, besides five others in the Brigades des Recherches and two in the Contrôle Général.

21. The French system in general, and Paris in particular, is accustomed to the Commissariats de Police. But while the Procurator-Fiscal in Scotland occupies in some measure an analogous position—that is, of a legally-trained judicial officer attached to the police, although not of them—I am not of opinion that anything would be gained by instituting a Commissariat of Police in connection with London police stations.

In the first place they would have to number at least 150, and receive a salary, in accordance with the higher price of living, etc., in England compared to the Continent, of at least £500 a year, rising to £700, and have besides a costly staff.

As they could not be in the station, office and house room would be required, involving as much again.

If English public opinion would tolerate the private inquisition—which I doubt—much delay would ensue.

Even in Paris arrests effected after midnight do not reach the Commissaire until after 9 a.m., and, as a fact, few prisoners are mentally fit for examination for some hours after arrest ; and that is only a few minutes sooner than an English prisoner would be brought before a Stipendiary Magistrate in open court.

It is not 20 times a year that a Metropolitan Police Magistrate marks a charge-sheet that the charge has been improperly taken, although some 100,000 persons pass in that time through the hands of the Metropolitan Police.

There could be no stronger proof that upon the whole there is little here to complain of. If some persons are deterred from coming forward to further the cause of justice by the publicity involved, it is part of the price Englishmen pay for their freedom.

22. The accompanying "Conte du Journal" gives a good illustration* of the proceedings at a Commissariat, although in itself imaginary. Whether the heroine who brought suspicion on herself by too prolonged sampling of goods in various drapery shops and departments would have been charged in London is doubtful. I incline to the affirmative, as she was charged by a responsible person. The French system saved her from the public scandal—and this is the greater in proportion to the defence—but estopped her remedy for the wrongful arrest which she would have had here.

Another illustration would be the recent notorious pledge case. In France Lord ——— would probably have been released by the Commissaire. But that course here would have been provocative of angry denunciation of unequal laws.

REPORT.

TO THE RIGHT HON. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to submit my Report on the Police of the Metropolis for the year 1906.

Strength of force.

The authorised strength on 31st December 1906 was 32 Superintendents, 552 Inspectors, 2,316 Sergeants and 14,843 Constables ; total 17,743, being an increase of 1 Superintendent, 6 Inspectors, 77 Sergeants and 449 Constables since 31st December 1905.

Number employed on special duties.

Of these, 5 Superintendents, 50 Inspectors, 231 Sergeants and 1,626 Constables were employed on special duties for various Government Departments, including special protection posts at public offices and buildings, dockyards and military stations, and by public companies and private individuals. The services of men thus employed were paid for to the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District by the Departments or persons concerned. The details are given in Return No. 12.

Number available for service.

The number of Police available for service in the Metropolis, exclusive of those specially employed and whose services were paid for, was 27 Superintendents, 502 Inspectors, 2,085 Sergeants and 13,217 Constables ; total 15,831.

Proportion on daily leave.

An average of one-fourteenth of the force (1,005), excluding those employed on special duties, and those who are on the sick list, &c., is daily on leave in accordance with the regulation granting one day's leave of absence to each man every fortnight. The withdrawals from duty caused by men sick and on detached sick leave averaged 478 daily.

Proportion on day and night duty.

Under the existing system about 60 per cent. of the number available for duty in the streets is required for night duty—from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. The remaining 40 per cent. is detailed for duty in four reliefs in town districts and two reliefs in country districts from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Area.

The Metropolitan Police District as established by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47. extends over a radius of 15 miles from Charing Cross, exclusive of the City of London and the liberties thereof, and embraces an area of 699·42 square miles extending from Colney Heath, Hertfordshire, on the north, to Mogadore, Todworth Heath, in the south, and from Lark Hall, Essex, in the east, to Staines Moor, Middlesex, in the west.

Rateable value.

The mean rateable value of the Metropolitan area for Metropolitan Police purposes for the year 1906–1907 was £52,911,670, but of the enormous actual value of the property in charge of the Police it is impossible to form any estimate.

Police rate in the £.

The Police rate is now fixed by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 67. at 9*d.* in the £, of which 4*d.* in the £ is payable out of the Local Taxation Account under the Local Government Act, 1888.

Amount of rate raised, &c.

The total amount of Police rate raised from the parishes for the year ended 31st March 1907 was £1,097,574, and the Local Taxation Account (including £4,389 under the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896) contributed £865,136 to the Police Fund during the year.

Pay.

The pay of the force alone, including Chief Constables, Superintendents, Inspectors, Sergeants, and Constables, was £1,526,865.

Duties of police.

Table 17 gives some idea of the multifarious duties which devolve upon the Police, and which are yearly increasing in volume and in number.

Habitual drunkards.

During the year orders were made in 260 cases for notices of convictions of habitual drunkards to be sent to the Police authority, 36 of these orders being made by Courts of Assize and Quarter Sessions, and 224 by Courts of Summary Jurisdiction.

The description (and portrait when obtainable) of these persons has been furnished to licensed persons and secretaries of clubs as required by the Licensing Act, 1902.

Registered clubs.

1,054 clubs, registered under the provisions of the Licensing Act, 1902, were on the Register at the end of the year. Orders were made during the year by Courts of Summary Jurisdiction for 18 clubs to be struck off the Register.

Police summonses.

The number of summonses issued on the application of Police during 1906 was 30,223, a decrease of 2,246 as compared with 1905. Convictions were obtained in 28,116 cases, the remaining 2,107 summonses being dismissed. Detailed particulars of these proceedings are shown in Tables 19 and 19A.

Other summonses.

105,204 summonses were applied for by private individuals during the year and served by Police.

Accidents.

The number of accidents which occurred in the streets during 1906 by which persons were killed was 212, as compared with 172 in 1905, and 155 in 1904. During 1906, 40 of these were caused by covered vehicles, as compared with 29 in 1905 and 34 in 1904. The number of accidents which occurred in the streets during 1906 by which persons were injured was 14,060 as compared with 11,688 in 1905, and 10,384 in 1904, and exceeds the number in any previous year. During 1906, 1,682 of these were caused by covered vehicles, as compared with 1,553 in 1905, and 1,358 in 1904 (see Tables 13, 14, and 15).

Stations erected, altered, &c

During the year 1906, the under-mentioned new stations, section houses, &c., which were in course of erection at the end of 1905, were completed, viz. :—

Banstead—New station in lieu of old.
Clerkenwell—Married quarters over Court premises.

The Superintendent's house and the married quarters were completed at Rochester Row, and the upper floors of Southwark Old Court were adapted as a residence for the Superintendent of the "M" Division.

The new section house for Candidates was commenced at Regency Street, and new cottages were erected for married quarters at Ashford.

New stables, commenced in 1905, were completed at Hackney.

A new block of married quarters was being erected at Huntley Street.

The undermentioned works which were in hand at the end of 1905, were completed :—

Wapping—Embankment.
Waterloo Pier—New pontoons.

The following important works were taken in hand and, with the exception of those in italics, finished in 1906 :—

Barking—Boundary wall to site.
Bow Street—Improvements and new cells.
Brixton—Enlargement of telegraph room.
Commercial Street—Alterations and additions (begun in 1905).

Smitham Bottom—Fire station.
Southall—Elm Lodge coach-house.
Wallington—(including a shelter).

Fixed point boxes have been placed in position at :—

Lewisham—Torridan Road.
Norbury.

CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT.

The total number of persons apprehended during the year 1906 for all offences included in the Returns was 119,897, a decrease of 7,420 as compared with the preceding year. Of these, 3,418 were convicted at Sessions, 96,335 were convicted by magistrates, 630 were acquitted, bills ignored, &c., at Sessions, and 19,459 were discharged by magistrates. The number of persons convicted at Sessions increased by 242, while the number of persons convicted by magistrates decreased by 7,027, and the number discharged by magistrates decreased by 609. The decrease, which took place in the latter half of the year, occurs principally in minor offences, such as drunkenness and drunkenness with aggravations (3,674), offences against Police Acts (1,276), assaults of various kinds (1,125), gaming in public places (496), and 489 in simple larceny and other minor larcenies. (See Tables 17 and 22.)

There is a decrease of 1,141 in the number of criminal offences reported during the year, and a decrease of 1,318 in the number of felonies relating to property. The apprehensions for these offences decreased by 426 and 595 respectively. The proportion of felonies to each 1,000 of the estimated population was 2·391, and is the lowest recorded during the period for which statistics are available. The value of the property stolen decreased by £33,055 as compared with 1905, with a decrease in the value of property recovered of £10,880. (See Tables 17 and 30.)

The return of "Principal Offences" (No. 24) shows that 18,907 offences were committed during the year 1906 as compared with 20,112 in 1905, a decrease of 1,205. The number of apprehensions for those offences decreased by 460, and the convictions by 450. With the exception of a decrease in larcenies (1,354), and a slight increase in cases of wounding and fraud, there is little variation to record.

Burglaries decreased from 512 in 1905, to 445 in 1906. Housebreakings decreased from 1,522 in 1905 to 1,459 in 1906, but the number of apprehensions increased by 60, and the convictions by 49. Violence to the person was used in only three cases of burglary and one case of housebreaking. 713 of these offences were committed in houses left with no person in charge ; in 221 cases of burglary and 627 cases of housebreaking the value of the property stolen was less than £5 ; 10 burglaries and six housebreakings occurred in which the loss amounted to £100 and upwards ; in 130 cases of burglary and 120 cases of housebreaking no loss was ultimately sustained. Shopbreakings increased by 20, but there was an increase of 24 apprehensions and 43 convictions. (See Tables 24, 31, and 32.)

430 persons were sentenced to terms of penal servitude as compared with 374 during the year 1905. The number of sentences of five years' penal servitude and upwards was 158 as compared with 146 in 1905. The number of persons sentenced to police supervision was 175 as compared with 139 in 1905. (See Table 26.)

3,155 children and young persons under the age of 16 years were taken into custody for various offences during the year 1906, as compared with 3,672 in 1905.

17 cases of murder of persons above one year of age were reported as compared with 21 in 1905, and are accounted for as follows :—In nine cases arrests were made, and in six the murderers committed suicide. One of the two remaining cases was that known as the "Studio Mystery," where a young artist was found to have been murdered under circumstances of exceptional brutality ; after prolonged enquiries evidence to justify an arrest was not forthcoming. In the other case a married woman died in the Edmonton Infirmary ; a post-mortem examination disclosed the fact that an illegal operation had been performed upon her, and that she had died from its effects; a verdict of wilful murder against some person unknown was returned at the inquest. Of the nine persons apprehended, two were convicted and sentenced to death, five were found to be insane at the time of the commission of the offence and ordered to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure, one was acquitted at Sessions, and one was discharged by Magistrate.

616 penal servitude convicts, 18 supervisees and 1,088 persons against whom a previous conviction had been proved under the Prevention of Crimes Act were liberated into the Metropolitan Police District, making a total of 1,722, the figures for the preceding year being 1,685. The number liberated into all other districts was 2,942.

2,168 fresh cases were this year registered of persons coming under Sections 5, 7 and 8 of the Prevention of Crimes Act. Under Section 7 alone 216 convictions took place.

There were in addition 14,410 cases registered in which the convictions did not bring the persons concerned within the provisions of the above Act.

1,090 licence holders and supervisees reported themselves during the year, and 245 failed to report; of these 140 failed in the Metropolitan Police District, and, for this offence, 41 were arrested.

1,062 licence holders, supervisees, or habitual criminals were convicted during the year for complicity in other offences.

The "finger prints" system continued to give unqualified satisfaction, not only in the United Kingdom, but also, it is said, in all other countries where introduced. Identifications still show an upward trend, although signs are not wanting that high-water mark has almost been reached. At Scotland Yard, 6,776 identifications were effected this year (as against 6,186 in 1905); of these 2,982 were for Metropolitan Police, and 3,794 for Provincial forces.

PUBLIC CARRIAGES.—LICENSING DEPARTMENT.

Carriages.

During 1906, licences were issued in respect of public carriages as follows:—

6,648	two-wheeled hackney carriages.
3,844	four-wheeled „ „
96	mechanical „ „
2,964	horse-drawn omnibuses	stage carriages.
783	mechanical „
905	horse-drawn tramway cars
1,396	mechanical „ „
Total ...	16,636

This, in comparison with the numbers licensed in 1905, shows a net increase of 51 carriages, made up as follows:—

Increase.

Mechanical hackney carriages	77
„ omnibuses	542
„ tramway cars	272
Horse-drawn „ „	119
Total	1,010

Decrease.

Two-wheeled hackney carriages	348
Four-wheeled „ „	91
Horse-drawn omnibuses	520
Total	959

The increase of horse-drawn tramway cars is more apparent than real, and is accounted for by the fact that a good number were licensed twice in one year, owing to the London County Council taking over the Northern Tramway Systems to work, thus necessitating a surrender by the old company and a re-licence to the Council.

Return of proprietors' licences issued during the past five years :—

Year.	Hackney Carriages.			Stage Carriages.				Totals.
	Two-Wheeled.	Four-Wheeled.		Omnibuses.		Tramway Cars.
		Animal.	Mechanical.	Animal.	Mechanical.	Animal.	Mechanical.
1906	6,648	3,844	96	2,964	783	905	1,396	16,636
1905	6,996	3,935	19	3,484	241	786	1,124	16,585
1904	7,137	3,920	2	3,551	31	928	810	16,379
1903	7,499	3,905	1	3,623	13	1,143	576	16,760
1902	7,577	3,805	—	3,667	29	1,342	316	16,736

It will thus be seen how rapidly mechanical traction is replacing horse traction for public carriages, for, whereas the total number of mechanically propelled vehicles in 1902 was but 345, it had, during 1905, risen to 1,384, and during 1906 to 2,275.

Two-wheeled hackney carriages continue to rapidly decrease, and may be expected to be more rapidly displaced in the near future by motor cabs. Four-wheeled cabs on the other hand do not decrease so rapidly, as they evidently meet a requirement for the conveyance of luggage to and from the several railway stations and for suburban work.

Amongst the carriages licensed in 1906 there were 1,394 new carriages, viz. :—

231 two-wheeled hackney carriages.
148 four-wheeled hackney carriages, animal power.
85 four-wheeled hackney carriages, mechanical power.
609 mechanical omnibuses
7 horse-drawn omnibuses } Stage carriages.
314 mechanical tramway cars

Total ... 1,394

The number of new carriages licensed during the last five years has been :—

1906 1,394
1905 1,095
1904 984
1903 1,061
1902 880

Only 231 new hansom cabs were presented against 383 last year ; 148 four-wheeled horse cabs against 262 in 1905, whilst only 7 new horse omnibuses were submitted in 1906, and no new horse-drawn tramcars. It would appear, therefore, that proprietors are waiting developments and are replacing only worn out stock.

The number of vehicles rejected by the Inspectors in the several districts during the year, when presented for licensing, was 1,366, made up as follows :—

649 two-wheeled carriages.
333 four-wheeled carriages, animal power.
21 four-wheeled carriages, mechanical power.
193 motor omnibuses,
108 horse-drawn omnibuses.
38 electrical tramway cars.
24 horse-drawn tramway cars.

Total ... 1,366

Of the above number all but one two-wheeled hackney carriage and one horse-drawn tramway car were subsequently licensed, or could have been had the necessary alterations been made.

The following Table shows the number and class of carriages rejected during the last five years :—

Year.	Temporarily rejected.				Finally.
	Hansoms.	Four-wheeled.	Omnibuses.	Tramway Cars.	Hansoms.	Four-wheeled.	Omnibuses.	Tramway Cars.
1906	654	334	285	69	1	—	—	1
1905	833	432	171	16	11	23	8	—
1904	1,140	621	160	51	25	23	3	—
1903	405	195	48	10	7	19	1	1
1902	265	136	35	9	10	4	1	1

The decrease in the number of rejections of hackney carriages tends to show that the high standard of fitness adopted in 1904 has brought about the elimination of worn out vehicles, and this is further shown by the fact that in only one case has it been necessary to reject a cab as being not up to the required standard of fitness.

The above number of rejections does not include an enormous number of cases of motor omnibuses presented at the Chief Office and not passed because of the failure to come up to the standard as to quiet running, nor to many motor cabs which failed to satisfy the requirements as to turning capacity.

Several new types of motor omnibuses and cabs submitted, have been rejected, either temporarily or finally, owing to their not being up to standard.

Makers of chassis frequently present them for inspection before affixing a body to ascertain whether they are likely to pass the test. The efforts referred to in the Report of 1905 to bring all motor omnibuses to a uniform standard of fitness resulted in a set of draft regulations being drawn up. These were discussed with representatives of the manufacturers and omnibus companies and finally agreed to.

Owing, however, to a great number of parts having been already laid down in the factories, it was found necessary to suspend the enforcement of these new regulations for a period of six months, but at the expiration of a period somewhat in excess of the six months, all omnibuses presented were required to conform to their requirements.

These Regulations subsequently became the subject of enquiry by a Select Committee of the House of Commons, who considered it desirable that the Regulations should also deal with certain additional matters. The recommendations were given effect to as soon as possible, and after a further conference with manufacturers and users, the existing Regulations were agreed to, and are being enforced. Complaints as to vibration, undue noise, &c., having multiplied with the increase in the number of motor omnibuses licensed, it has been found advisable to appoint a Committee of three to pass or reject vehicles, this Committee being independent of the Staff appointed to inspect Public Carriages.

As was anticipated, this induced the makers to make greater efforts to produce a more satisfactory vehicle in respect of noise, and the motor omnibuses since licensed show marked improvement. The amount of vibration depending largely on the condition of the road surface, it is not easy to discover a remedy, but it is hoped that one may be found in time.

A good number of motor omnibuses, chiefly of foreign make, which in running developed serious mechanical defects, have been stopped, and they will not again be permitted to ply as public service vehicles until they are satisfactorily altered and comply, in all respects, with existing requirements.

Inspections.

The increase in the number of motor vehicles licensed has led to an enormous increase in the work connected with the inspection and supervision of carriages after they have been licensed; the following Table shows the number of motor omnibuses alone reported by the Public Carriage Staff to be unfit for public use from various defects during the year.

Return showing the number of motor omnibuses reported unfit during 1906 :—

No. of Motor Omnibuses Licensed.	Number Reported Unfit.						Total number reported unfit.
	Unduly noisy.	Defects in steering gear.	Defective brakes.	Oil or Grease dropping from parts.	No. of fires.	Miscellaneous defects.
783	2,036	158	661	482	34	381	3,752

This table indicates that many of these vehicles have been reported several times.

On various days (in addition to the usual daily general inspection) special morning and night inspections have been made of horses, carriages, &c., and those then found defective, together with those found defective during the daily supervision, are shown below and compared with the figures of previous years :—

Year.	Carriages Licensed.		Found unfit during Early Morning and Night Inspections by Public Carriage Staff. In the above-mentioned cases either a notice not to use until fit or (in cases of slight defect) a notice for necessary repairs to be done was served on the proprietor, and visits were made to the premises to see that the notices were complied with. The large increase in the number of horses reported last year is again well maintained this year, being only 327 short of the number reported last year, when there were 940 more horse-drawn vehicles licensed, thus showing that though the motors have claimed a good deal of attention, the condition of the horses has not been allowed to escape observation. The result of the sustained observation is, that the horses reported unfit by the public are this year less in number than for some years past.

Comparatively few carriages were reported for serious structural defects, the majority of the cases shown in the above return being for such defects as dirty linings or cushions, broken windows, carriages requiring paint, varnish, &c. In a number of the motor omnibuses reported for defective brakes or steering gear, the omnibuses were peremptorily ordered back to the garage, it being deemed unsafe to allow them to ply, and in one case where a driver failed to have his brakes rectified, he was summoned for the offence and convicted. In addition to the above, the following cases of unfitness were reported, but no notices were served on the proprietors, because either the horses had recovered (or in a few cases had died), or the carriages or harness had been repaired before the police could take action, viz. :—horses 175, carriages 1,277, and harness 39.

The premises of proprietors have been regularly visited by the Public Carriage Staff during the year, and the results, together with those of previous years, are given below :—

Year.	Number of Special Visits made by Staff.	Result of Visits.		Stables found to be in an insanitary condition.
		Carriages found unfit.	Horses found unfit.
1906	9,937	2,070	653	5

1903	11,538	306	258	3
1902	11,682	247	191	4

It may be of interest to note that of the 5,202 horses reported unfit during the year, observation and enquiries show that they had been disposed of as follows :—

29 proprietors were proceeded against for cruelty, principally for working horses in an unfit state, during the year; convictions followed in 26 cases, whilst 3 were dismissed.

Steps were taken in every case to see that the horses, unless destroyed, were not again used until they had recovered.

During the year, 10 proprietors' licences were suspended and 21 revoked for non-compliance with the law, or breaches of the Order of the Secretary of State.

Hackney carriage standings provide for the accommodation of 7,131 carriages. This is irrespective of the accommodation provided in the City and at the various railway stations.

DRIVERS AND CONDUCTORS.

During 1906, licences were issued to :—

12,343	hackney drivers,	animal power,
124	„ „	mechanical power,
4,148	stage drivers,	„ „
5,316	„ „	animal „
10,658	conductors.
Total ...	32,589

In 1905, the total number of licences issued was 31,413, and compared with the issue for that year, the figures for 1906 show a decrease of 320 hackney drivers (animal power) and 853 stage drivers (animal power), whilst there is an increase of 101 hackney drivers (mechanical power), 1,674 stage drivers (mechanical power), and 574 conductors.

The following table shows the number of drivers' and conductors' licences issued during the last five years :—

First applications for hackney drivers' licences during the year numbered 578. The applicants were in every case examined as to their knowledge of London, with the result that 302 passed and 276 failed. Many of the applicants were examined more than once, their answers to the questions having been unsatisfactory at the previous examination. The table below shows the number of applicants for hackney drivers' licences, who satisfactorily passed the required examination as to their knowledge of London, during the past five years :—

Year.	Number Examined.	Number Passed.	Remarks.
1906 ...	578	302	Applicants are examined as to their knowledge of the principal public buildings, places of amusement, railway stations, clubs, squares, &c., and the most expeditious routes to and from these places.
1905 ...	682	331
1904 ...	735	360
1903 ...	1,039	805
1902 ...	1,072	837

It will be seen that the number of persons seeking to become licensed hackney drivers during the past year has been less than in any year of the previous quinquennial period. It is difficult to explain why this should be, but it appears the calling is either not so attractive as formerly or there has been sufficient employment in other branches for the class of men who usually apply.

A statement was made that the examination was too severe, but lists of the questions usually asked have been printed and circulated for the information of intending applicants, so that they may prepare themselves before attending for examination. 306 applicants, who satisfactorily passed the examination as to their knowledge of London during the year and the latter part of the preceding year, were further tested as to their ability to drive horses ; 262 passed, the remaining 44 failed. 169 men were also tested as to their ability to drive a motor cab ; 136 passed, the remainder were unsuccessful. 394 applicants for "original" stage drivers' licences were tested as to their proficiency in driving a carriage drawn by a pair of horses ; 323 passed, 71 failed. 2,684 applicants were tested as to their proficiency in driving motor omnibuses of various types ; 1,890 passed the test, the remainder were unsuccessful. Many of the above were tested on more than one occasion before being finally passed or rejected.

The greatest possible care is taken that only thoroughly capable drivers are granted licences to drive carriages propelled by mechanical power, and should an applicant fail to pass after being given three separate trials, he is, as a rule, rejected as being unsuitable. Men who are known to be addicted to drink, or who have been guilty of furious or reckless driving are not granted licences for mechanically propelled carriages. The following table shows the number of men tested as to their driving ability during the last five years :—

In 1,083 cases of a like nature, and where it was the first offence, cautionary notices were sent to the drivers and conductors complained of.

16 licences not included in the above return were refused renewal, as the licensees, after a previous warning, had not regularly used their licences as a means of livelihood.

In 226 cases "original" or first applications for licences were refused, the result of the enquiries as to character of the applicants being unsatisfactory. In 990 cases of "original" applications specially submitted the licences were granted.

During 1906, in addition to the 31,413 men who were licensed the previous year, applications for requisitions for licences were made by 3,662 men who had, at some previous time, held a licence, and by 6,212 men who had not been licensed before, making a grand total of 41,287 requisitions for licences issued during the year.

Of the 3,662 licensed before men who applied, 3,093 took out licences, 413 did not continue with their application, whilst 156 were refused licences. Of the 6,212 first applications, 4,270 men took out licences, 1,716 did not continue with the application, and 226 were refused licences.

During the year no less than 92,085 letters were despatched from the Licensing Branch, which, together with those sent from the Lost Property Branch, amount to no less than 191,760 letters sent.

Some of the provisions of a new Public Carriage Order issued by the Secretary of State in January 1906 having caused dissatisfaction in respect of certain matters therein dealt with, these were referred to a Select Committee of the House of Commons to consider. Their report justified the Order in all its details, but the parts objected to having been previously suspended have not been renewed pending the issue of a new Order.

LOST PROPERTY BRANCH.

The awards paid to drivers and conductors numbered 26,257, and amounted to 4,213*l.* These included the following sums :—nine of 5*l.*, three of 6*l.*, one of 7*l.*, four of 8*l.*, one of 9*l.*, three of 10*l.*, one of 11*l.*, one of 12*l.*, one of 14*l.*, one of 16*l.*, and one of 20*l.* 45,767 written enquiries were received in respect of property thought to have been lost in public carriages, being an increase of 942 on the figures for 1905, and an increase of 14,993 on the figures for 1903. There were also many thousands of personal applications at the Lost Property Office during the year.

* The large number, as compared with the return for 1905, is mainly due to the prevalence of Influenza.
† This does not include six officers not on the Sick List who died suddenly.

Average daily Number of Sick.

The total number of men for whom payment was made to the Divisional Surgeons, was on 30th June 1906, 16,428, and on 31st December 1906, 16,647, giving as the mean 16,537. To this must be added 899, the average number of men in the outlying dockyard divisions and men employed beyond the boundaries of the Metropolitan Police District, making a total of 17,436.

The addition of the "morning states" for each day divided by 365 shows the following results :—

Average daily number of men on the sick list	425·34
" " " " sick leave	22·71
" " " " detached leave	30·66
Total	478·71

This gives as the daily average loss on the whole Force by sickness a percentage of 2·74, as against 2·49 in 1905.

REPORT.

TO THE RIGHT HON. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to submit my Report on the Police of the Metropolis for the year 1907.

Strength of force.

The authorised strength on 31st December, 1907, was 32 Superintendents, 565 Inspectors, 2,355 Sergeants and 14,967 Constables ; total 17,919, being an increase of 13 Inspectors, 39 Sergeants and 124 Constables since 31st December, 1906.

Number employed on special duties.

Of these, 5 Superintendents, 53 Inspectors, 236 Sergeants and 1,600 Constables were employed on special duties for various Government Departments, including special protection posts at public offices and buildings, dockyards and military stations, and by public companies and private individuals. The services of men thus employed were paid for to the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District by the Departments or persons concerned. The details are given in Return No. 12.

Number available for service.

The number of Police available for service in the Metropolis, exclusive of those specially employed and whose services were paid for, was 27 Superintendents, 512 Inspectors, 2,119 Sergeants and 13,367 Constables ; total 16,025.

Proportion on daily leave.

An average of one-fourteenth of the force (1,015), excluding those employed on special duties, and those who are on the sick list, &c., is daily on leave in accordance with the regulation granting one day's leave of absence to each man every fortnight. The withdrawals from duty caused by men sick and on sick and detached sick leave averaged 490 daily.

Proportion on day and night duty.

Under the existing system about 60 per cent. of the number available for duty in the streets is required for night duty—from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. The remaining 40 per cent. is detailed for duty in four reliefs in town districts and two reliefs in country districts from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Area.

The Metropolitan Police District as established by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47. extends over a radius of 15 miles from Charing Cross, exclusive of the City of London and the liberties thereof, and embraces an area of 699·42 square miles extending from Colney Heath, Hertfordshire, on the north, to Mogadore, Todworth Heath, Surrey, in the south, and from Lark Hall, Essex, in the east, to Staines Moor, Middlesex, in the west.

Rateable value.

The mean rateable value of the Metropolitan area for Metropolitan Police purposes for the year 1907–1908 was £53,790,268, but of the enormous actual value of the property in charge of the Police it is impossible to form any estimate.

Police rate in the £.

The Police rate is now fixed by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 67, at 9*d.* in the £, of which 4*d.* in the £ is payable out of the Local Taxation Account under the Local Government Act, 1888.

Amount of rate raised, &c.

The total amount of Police rate raised from the parishes for the year ended 31st March, 1908, was £1,118,208, and the Local Taxation Account (including £4,389 under the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896) contributed £893,159 to the Police Fund during the year.

Pay.

The pay of the force alone, including Chief Constables, Superintendents, Inspectors, Sergeants, and Constables, was £1,552,540.

Duties of police.

Table 17 gives some idea of the multifarious duties which devolve upon the Police, and which are yearly increasing in volume and in number.

Habitual drunkards.

During the year orders were made in 364 cases for notices of convictions of habitual drunkards to be sent to the Police authority, 57 of these orders being made by Courts of Assize and Quarter Sessions, and 307 by Courts of Summary Jurisdiction. The description (and portrait when obtainable) of these persons has been furnished to licensed persons and secretaries of clubs as required by the Licensing Act, 1902.

Registered clubs.

1,091 clubs, registered under the provisions of the Licensing Act, 1902, were on the Register at the end of the year. Orders were made during the year by Courts of Summary Jurisdiction for 27 clubs to be struck off the Register.

Police summonses.

The number of summonses issued on the application of Police during 1907 was 25,471, a decrease of 4,752 as compared with 1906. Convictions were obtained in 23,481 cases, the remaining 1,990 summonses being dismissed. Detailed particulars of these proceedings are shown in Tables 19 and 19A.

Other summonses.

106,658 summonses were applied for by private individuals during the year and served by Police.

Accidents.

The number of accidents which occurred in the streets during 1907 by which persons were killed was 283, as compared with 212 in 1906, and 172 in 1905. The number of accidents which occurred in the streets during 1907 by which persons were injured was 16,772 as compared with 14,060 in 1906, and 11,688 in 1905, and exceeds the number in any previous year. Information as to the vehicles causing these accidents is given in Tables 13, 14, and 15.

Stations erected, altered, &c.

During the year 1907, the under-mentioned new stations, section houses, &c., which were in course of erection at the end of 1906, were completed, viz. :—

Bexley Heath—New station in lieu of old.
Clapham—New station in lieu of old.
Huntley Street—New married quarters block, and

The new stations at Shadwell and Wood Green were still in progress.

The new building to provide for the extension of the Chief Office, commenced in 1904, was completed.

The new section house for Candidates in Regency Street was completed and taken into use.

New stations were commenced at :—

Erith, Sutton, Wapping, Wealdstone.

The undermentioned important works, which were in hand at the end of 1906, were completed :—

Bow Street (Station).—New cells, improvements, &c.
Commercial Street—Alterations and additions (begun in 1905).
Eltham—Alterations and additions.
Erith—Embankment wall to site.
Gipsy Hill—New parade room and alterations to offices.
Notting Dale—New parade room.
Woolwich—Improvement in ventilation of cells.

The following works which were taken in hand in 1907, were still in progress at the end of the year :—

Blackheath Road—Temporary station and cells.
Lea Bridge Road—New section house.
Regency Street—Married quarters.
South Mimms—Cottages.

The undermentioned works were taken in hand and finished in 1907 :—

Edmonton—Alterations, new cells, and improvements to offices.
Hackney—Alteration to provide new office for the Local Inspector (C.I.D.).
Leman Street—Improvement in Inspector's office and telephone arrangements.
Notting Dale—Converting married quarters into offices, &c.
Notting Hill—Conversion of old station into married quarters.

Sanitary improvements were made at Kilburn, Leyton, Southgate, Upper Holloway, Victoria Park, and Walthamstow ; and foot-bath enclosures were provided at Charing Cross Road, Marlborough Street, and Vine Street.

A considerable addition was made during the year to the number of points, other than Police stations, at which Ambulances are permanently provided. The number so added was 63, but in four of these cases the Ambulances were placed inside existing buildings, viz., The National Gallery of British Art, The National Portrait Gallery, Cheam fire station, and Beddington Corner fire station.

During the year, fixed point boxes were erected at the following places :—

Child's Hill, Chingford, Golder's Green, Hackney Triangle, Surbiton, Woodford.

CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION DEPARTMENT.

The total number of persons apprehended during the year 1907 for all offences was 108,284, a decrease of 11,613 as compared with the preceding year. Of these, 3,580 were convicted at Sessions, 85,148 were convicted by magistrates, 675 were acquitted, Bills ignored, &c., at Sessions, and 18,802 were discharged by magistrates. The number of persons convicted at Sessions increased by 162, while the number of persons convicted and discharged by magistrates decreased by 11,187, and 657 respectively. The decrease, which took place principally in the first half of the year, occurs chiefly in minor offences, such as offences against Police Acts (5,420), drunkenness with aggravations (5,168), prostitution (1,857), and begging (928), while there is an increase in simple larceny and minor larcenies (794), and betting and gaming (863). (See Tables 17 and 22.) The decrease in arrests for offences against Police Acts is due partly to the fact that the arrests for street betting are now shown under the heading " betting and gaming."

There is an increase of 2,484 in the number of criminal offences reported during the year, and an increase of 2,425 in the number of felonies relating to property. The apprehensions for these offences increased by 708 and 723 respectively. The proportion of felonies to each 1,000 of the estimated population was 2·689. The number of persons recognised at Police Stations as having been in custody more than once for felony during the year 1907 was 180, as compared with 133 in 1906 and 178 in 1905. The value of the property stolen increased by £54,848 as compared with 1906, with an increase of £20,746 in the value of the property recovered. (See Tables 17 and 30.) The increase both in the amount of property stolen and recovered is due to two cases in which a large amount of property was involved.

There were 9 cases during 1907 in which the amount of loss was £1,000 or above, and 17 cases in which the property stolen was valued at sums varying between £500 and £1,000.

The return of "Principal Offences" (No. 24) shows that 21,340 offences were committed during the year 1907 as compared with 18,907 in 1906, an increase of 2,433. The number of apprehensions for those offences increased by 639, and the convictions by 310. The increase occurred in larcenies (1,845), and in cases of burglary and housebreaking (605).

Burglaries increased from 445 in 1906, to 547 in 1907, with an increase of 79 apprehensions and 83 convictions. Housebreakings increased from 1,459 in 1906 to 1,962 in 1907, while the apprehensions decreased by 15, and the convictions by 6. Violence to the person was used in 6 cases of burglary and 6 cases of housebreaking. 922 of these offences were committed in houses left with no person in charge; in 274 cases of burglary and 871 cases of housebreaking the value of the property stolen was less than £5; 8 burglaries and 20 housebreakings occurred in which the loss amounted to £100 and upwards; in 196 cases of burglary and 153 cases of housebreaking no loss was ultimately sustained. Shopbreakings increased by 36, but the apprehensions decreased by 65 and the convictions by 73. It may be a coincidence, but it is certainly noticeable that the marked increase in burglaries and housebreakings was synchronous with the period during which a relatively large number of short sentences, and orders " binding over " prisoners, were passed. (See Tables 24, 31, and 32.)

427 persons were sentenced to terms of penal servitude as compared with 430 during the year 1906. The number of sentences of five years' penal servitude and upwards was 132 as compared with 158 in 1906. The number of persons sentenced to police supervision was 88 as compared with 175 in 1906 and 139 in 1905. (See Table 26.)

3,330 children and young persons under the age of 16 years were taken into custody for various offences during the year 1907, as compared with 3,155 in 1906 and 3,672 in 1905.

12 cases of murder of persons above one year of age were reported as compared with 17 in 1906, and are accounted for as follows:—In seven cases arrests were made, and in three the murderers committed suicide. One of the two remaining cases was that of an elderly gentleman who was knocked down and robbed at Streatham by three men of whom he could give no description. He subsequently died, and although exhaustive enquiries were made no arrest resulted. In the other case an Italian organ grinder was found by City Police at Red Cross Street, Barbican, E.C., suffering from a severe wound on the back of the neck, which he stated was caused by what he thought was a piece of glass having been thrown at him by some youths while he was passing through Chiswell Street, St. Luke's. He was taken to hospital, but died under chloroform before an operation could be commenced. At the inquest a verdict of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown was returned by the jury, who came to the conclusion that the injury was caused by a sharp instrument held in the hand, and not by a missile thrown from a distance. No arrest has yet been made in this case. Of the seven persons apprehended, five were convicted and sentenced to death (one whose case was pending on 31st December, 1907, will be included in the figures for 1908) and two were acquitted at Sessions. (See Tables 24 and 26.)

One of these last cases was that known as the Camden Town murder, in which a woman of the town was found murdered in her bed on 12th September. Grave suspicion attached to a glass designer, who was arrested on the 4th October, and at the adjourned inquest, held on 28th October, a verdict of wilful murder was returned against him. He was subsequently committed to the Central Criminal Court, and, after a trial which lasted six days, was acquitted.

489 penal servitude convicts, 30 supervisees and 1,205 persons against whom a previous conviction had been proved under the Prevention of Crimes Act were liberated into the Metropolitan Police District, making a total of 1,724, the figures for the preceding year being 1,722. The number liberated into all other districts was 3,067.

2,274 fresh cases were this year registered of persons coming under Sections 5, 7 and 8 of the Prevention of Crimes Act. Under Section 7 alone 218 convictions took place.

There were in addition 14,450 cases registered in which the convictions did not bring the persons concerned within the provisions of the above Act.

1,055 licence holders and supervisees reported themselves during the year, and 226 failed to report; of these 121 failed in the Metropolitan Police District, and, for this offence, 27 were arrested.

1,605 licence holders, supervisees, or habitual criminals were convicted during the year for complicity in other offences.

Identifications by the finger print system increased very largely towards the end of the year, with the result that a total of 7,701 was recorded, as against 6,776 in 1906; of these 3,293 were for Metropolitan Police, and 4,408 for Provincial forces.

PUBLIC CARRIAGES.—LICENSING DEPARTMENT.

Carriages.

During 1907, licences were issued in respect of public carriages as follows:—

5,952	Hansom cabs.
3,866	Four-wheeled cabs.
723	Motor cabs.
2,557	Horse-drawn omnibuses	stage carriages.
1,205	Motor omnibuses
404	Horse-drawn tramway cars
1,768	Mechanical tramway cars
Total ... 16,475

This, in comparison with the numbers licensed in 1906, shows a net decrease of 161 carriages, made up as follows:—

Decrease.
Hansom cabs	696
Horse-drawn omnibuses	407
Horse-drawn tramway cars	501
Total	1,604
Increase.
Four-wheeled cabs	22
Motor cabs	627
Motor omnibuses	422
Mechanical tramway cars	372
Total	1,443

Motor traction has been responsible for a decrease in all classes of horse-drawn vehicles, except the four-wheeled cab. The increase in this class of cab is probably due to its usefulness as a luggage carrier and to a slight extension of suburban traffic.

Return of proprietors' licences issued during the past five years :—

Amongst the carriages licensed in 1907 there were 1,549 new vehicles, viz. :—

76 hansom cabs.
91 four-wheeled cabs, animal power.
626 four-wheeled motor cabs,
404 motor omnibuses
2 horse-drawn omnibuses } Stage carriages.
350 mechanical tramway cars

Total ... 1,549

The number of new carriages licensed during the last five years has been :—

1907 1,549
1906 1,394
1905 1,095

Apart from new motor vehicles and electric tramway cars the number of new vehicles presented for licensing has been very low, this being especially noticeable in the case of hansom cabs.

Proprietors of horse-drawn stock will not commit themselves by ordering new stock when they can buy up good second-hand property for a little more than the price it would cost them to repair their old vehicles.

The old horse masters do not seem disposed to embark upon motor vehicles, but are leaving the developments to the new Companies.

The number of vehicles rejected by the Inspectors in the several districts during the year, when presented for licensing, was 1,505, made up as follows :—

677 hansom cabs.
362 four-wheeled cabs, animal power.
58 motor cabs.
63 horse-drawn omnibuses.
297 motor omnibuses.
9 horse-drawn tramway cars.
39 electrical tramway cars.

Total ... 1,505

Of the above number all but three four-wheeled cabs (animal power) were subsequently licensed, or could have been had the necessary alterations been made.

The following Table shows the number and class of carriages rejected during the last five years :—

Year.	Temporarily rejected.				Finally rejected.
	Hansom Cabs.	Four-wheeled Cabs.	Omnibuses.	Tramway Cars.	Hansom Cabs.	Four-wheeled Cabs.	Omnibuses.	Tramway Cars.

The increase in the number of rejections of omnibuses is confined to motors, and is caused by the proprietors not having, in overhauling them, carried out the work in a satisfactory manner. A very high standard is insisted upon and no motor omnibus is licensed unless it fully conforms at the time it is presented for licensing to the requirements.

In addition to the rejections in the districts, several motor omnibuses and cabs presented at Scotland Yard were not passed as they did not come up to the required standard of fitness.

The members of the Noise Committee appointed in 1906 have continued their work throughout the year with the result that though 1,092 presentations were made to them, only 467 passed. Many of the vehicles were sent back several times for the noise to be reduced.

Inspections.

The rapid advance in the number of motor vehicles licensed has caused a corresponding increase in the work connected with the inspection and supervision of carriages after they have been licensed, and the following Table shows the number of motor omnibuses alone reported during the year by the Public Carriage Staff to be unfit for public use from various defects, and the figures are compared with those of the previous year :—

Year.	No. of Motor Omnibuses Licensed.	Number Reported Unfit.						Total reported unfit.
		Unduly noisy.	Defects in steering gear.	Defective brakes.	Oil or Grease dropping from parts.	Miscellaneous defects.	No. of fires.
1907	1,205	4,862	362	936	2,105	208	35	8,508
1906	783	2,036	158	661	482	381	34	3,752

It will thus be seen that many of the vehicles have been reported several times.

Efforts have been made by the Engineering Staffs of the various omnibus companies by alterations to the machinery to produce a quieter and more reliable type of vehicle. These alterations are at present only in the nature of experiments, but it is anticipated that good results will follow.

On various days (in addition to the usual daily general inspection) special morning and night inspections have been made of horses, carriages, &c., and those found to be defective, together with those found to be defective during the daily supervision, are shown below and compared with the figures of previous years :—

Year.	Carriages Licensed.		Found unfit during Early Morning and Night Inspections by the Public Carriage Staff.				Found unfit during Usual Daily Inspections by Public Carriage Staff, and by Police on duty at Standings.				Reported by the Public to be unfit.				Found unfit at Stables, by Public Carriage Staff.

In the above-mentioned cases either a notice not to use until fit or (in cases of slight defect) a notice for necessary repairs to be done was served on the proprietor, and visits were made to the premises to see that the notices were complied with.

It will thus be seen that during the year no less than 36,916 notices "not to use" in respect of defects to vehicles, horses or harness have been issued and served upon the various proprietors. It is also worthy of notice that though motor traction is so largely replacing horse-drawn the condition of the horses has not been neglected, for with a decrease in the number of horse-drawn vehicles there were 5,371 notices issued in respect of horses alone, compared with 5,202 in 1906.

Comparatively few carriages were reported for serious structural defects, the majority of the cases shown in the above return are for such defects as dirty linings or cushions, broken windows, carriages requiring paint, varnish, &c.

In a number of the motor omnibuses reported for defective brakes or steering gear, the omnibuses were peremptorily ordered back to the garage, it being deemed unsafe to allow them to continue running.

It may be of interest to note that of the 5,371 horses reported unfit during the year, observation and enquiries show that they had been disposed of as follows :—

Year.	Number subsequently certified fit.	Number found to have been sold or put to other work.	Number killed or died.	Leaving still under report, or not traced.
1907	2,331	1,914	95	1,031
1906	2,380	1,877	86	859

In addition to the above, the following cases of unfitness were reported, but no notices were served on the proprietors, because either the horses had recovered (or in a few instances had died), or the carriages or harness had been repaired before the police could take action, viz. :—horses 87, carriages 2,002, and harness 27.

The premises of proprietors have been regularly visited by the Public Carriage Staff during the year, and the results, together with those of the previous years, are given below :—

Year.	Number of Special Visits made by Staff.	Result of Visits.		Stables found to be in an insanitary condition.
		Carriages found unfit.	Horses found unfit.
1907	9,225	1,872	586	2

1904	11,051	1,080	511	11
1903	11,538	306	258	3

Fifteen proprietors were proceeded against for cruelty, principally for working horses in an unfit state, during the year; convictions followed in 11 cases, whilst 4 were dismissed.

Steps were taken in every case to see that the horses, unless destroyed, were not again used until they had recovered.

During the year, 12 proprietors' licences were suspended and 5 revoked for non-compliance with the law, or breaches of the Order of the Secretary of State.

Hackney carriage standings provide accommodation for 7,134 carriages. This is irrespective of the accommodation in the City and at the various railway stations.

DRIVERS AND CONDUCTORS.

During 1907, licences were issued to :—

11,592	Cab drivers (animal power),
818	Motor cab drivers,
4,333	Stage drivers (animal power),
4,716	Stage drivers (mechanical power),
10,284	Conductors.
Total ... 31,743

In 1906, the total number of licences was 32,589, and compared with the issue for that year, the figures for 1907 show a decrease of 751 cab drivers' (animal power), 983 stage drivers' (animal power), and 374 conductors', whilst there is an increase of 694 motor cab drivers and 568 stage drivers (mechanical power).

The following table shows the number of drivers' and conductors' licences issued during the last five years :—

First applications for hackney drivers' licences during the year numbered 2,144. The applicants were in every case examined as to their knowledge of London, with the result that 803 passed and 1,341 failed. Many of the applicants were examined more than once, their answers to the questions having been unsatisfactory at the previous examination, the great increase in the number of applicants being of course due to the introduction of motor drivers.

The table below shows the number of applicants for hackney drivers' licences, who satisfactorily passed the required examination as to their knowledge of London, during the past five years :—

Year.	Number Examined.	Number Passed.	Remarks.
1907 ...	2,144	803	Applicants are examined as to their knowledge of the principal public buildings, places of amusement, railway stations, clubs, squares, &c., and the most expeditious routes to and from these places.

1905 ...	682	331
1904 ...	735	360
1903 ...	1,039	805

206 applicants, who satisfactorily passed the examination as to their knowledge of London during the year and the latter part of the preceding year, were further tested as to their ability to drive horses; 177 passed, the remaining 29 failed.

1,444 men were tested as to their ability to drive a motor cab; 713 passed, the remainder were unsuccessful.

268 applicants for "original" stage drivers' licences were tested as to their proficiency in driving a carriage drawn by a pair of horses; 211 passed, 57 failed.

1,562 applicants were tested as to their proficiency in driving motor omnibuses of various types; 807 passed the test, the remainder were unsuccessful.

Many of the above were tested on more than one occasion before being finally passed or rejected.

The greatest possible care is taken to ensure that only thoroughly capable drivers are granted licences to drive carriages propelled by mechanical power, and should an applicant fail to pass after being given three separate trials, he is, as a rule, rejected as being unsuitable.

Men who are known to be addicted to drink, or to have been guilty of furious or reckless driving are not granted licences for mechanically propelled carriages.

The following table shows the number of men tested as to their driving abilities during the last five years :—

In 673 cases of a like nature, and where it was the first offence, cautionary notices were sent to the drivers and conductors complained of.

11 licences not included in the above return were refused renewal, as the licensees, after a previous warning, had not regularly used their licences as a means of livelihood.

In 205 cases "original" or first applications for licences were refused, the result of the enquiries as to character of the applicants being unsatisfactory.

In 813 cases of "original" applications specially submitted the licences were granted.

The following table shows the number of men licensed as drivers and conductors whose age at last renewal of licence exceeded 60 years ; also the number at a similar age licensed the preceding four years :—

During 1907, in addition to the 32,589 men who were licensed the previous year, applications for requisitions for licences were made by 4,578 men who had, at some previous time, held a licence, and by 5,756 men who had not been licensed before, making a grand total of 42,923 requisitions for licences issued during the year.

Of the 4,578 "licensed before" men who applied, 2,718 took out licences, 1,805 did not continue with their applications, or failed to pass the driving test, whilst 55 were refused licences.

Of the 5,756 first applications, 3,333 men took out licences, 2,273 did not continue with the application, or failed the driving test, and 150 were refused licences.

During the last few days of 1907 a commencement has been made with the photographing of applicants for licences in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Committee on cabs and omnibuses.

During the year 94,374 letters were despatched from the Branch, which, together with those sent from the Lost Property Branch, amount to no less than 198,914 letters sent.

LOST PROPERTY BRANCH.

During 1907 there were received in the Lost Property Office, 57,637 articles found in Public Carriages, representing, when compared with the figures for 1906, an increase of 883 articles.

The awards paid to drivers and conductors numbered 26,554, and amounted to 3,504*l.* 14*s.* 10½*d.* These included the following sums :—five of 5*l.*, one of 5*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, three of 6*l.*, one of 6*l.* 15*s.*, three of 7*l.*, one of 8*l.*, one of 9*l.*, three of 10*l.*, two of 11*l.*, three of 15*l.*, one of 16*l.*, one of 18*l.*, and five of 20*l.*

46,186 written enquiries were received in respect of property thought to have been lost in public carriages, being an increase of 419 on the figures for 1906.

There were also many thousands of personal applications at the Lost Property Office during the year.

The number of letters sent in cases where the property or journey afforded some clue to the owner was 43,070, an increase of 5,172 compared with 1906.

61,470 letters were sent to drivers and conductors during the year, being a decrease of 307 compared with 1906.

Average daily Number of Sick.

The total number of men for whom payment was made to the Divisional Surgeons, was on 30th June 1907, 16,896, and on 31st December 1907, 16,963, giving as the mean 16,929. To this must be added 921, the average number of men in the outlying dockyard divisions and men employed beyond the boundaries of the Metropolitan Police District, making a total of 17,850.

The addition of the "morning states" for each day divided by 365 shows the following results :—

NOTE.—The population for the years 1882 to 1890, and for the years 1892 to 1899 was taken from the Registrar-General's Returns; the census of 1891 and 1901 showed that the population of London during these periods had been over-estimated.

MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT on the HEALTH of the DUBLIN METROPOLITAN POLICE FORCE for the Year 1907.

During the year 1907 there has been a good deal of general sickness amongst the members of the Dublin Metropolitan Police. This seems to be due, for the most part, to the continued wet and cold weather which prevailed throughout the year. This was also the cause of increase of Influenza, cases of which became more and more numerous as the past winter advanced.

The per-centage of sickness amounted to 2·7, which is an increase on that of the past two years.

There were eight deaths altogether, two being due to Lung Disease, one to Typhoid Fever, and one to Diphtheria.

DIVISIONS AND BOUNDARIES OF THE DUBLIN METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT.

The Dublin Metropolitan Police was established under the provisions of the Act 6 & 7 William IV., Chapter 29, 4th July, 1836.

Boundary.—The District was defined and extended under the provisions of the Acts 1 Vic., cap. 25, and 2 & 3 Vic., cap. 78, sec. 14, 63 & 64 Vic., cap. 264, sec. 61, and Order in Council dated 23rd October, 1901. It now comprises the City of Dublin, and part of the County of Dublin, bounded as follows :—*

From the Lighthouse on the North Wall of the River Liffey, by a direct line to the Lighthouse at the end of the South Wall; thence by low-water mark and the sea shore to a point two furlongs beyond the Southern Wall of Mount Malpas, Killiney, and from said point by a line running two furlongs distance from said Wall to the entrance gate of said Mount; thence by a line at the like distance to the left or outside of the Glenageary and Rochestown roads, leading to Kill-of-the-Grange; thence at like distance by the cross road of Dean's-grange and Stillorgan-road, to a point on the left bank of the River Dodder two furlongs southward of Donnybrook-bridge; thence by the left bank of that river to the junction of the baronies of Newcastle and Uppercross, near Cypress-grove, and by the boundary of those baronies to the third lock on the Grand Canal, near Golden-bridge; thence by a direct line, drawn through the fields from said lock to Chapelizod-bridge on the River Liffey, to a point 50 perches from said lock where said line intersects the boundary between the parishes of St. Jude and Ballyfermott, and by said boundary to where it intersects the G. S. & W. Railway at the carriage sheds; thence by a continuation of aforesaid direct line until it again intersects the boundary between said parishes, near Stone House; thence by said parish boundary until it abuts on St. Laurence-road, near Lynch's-lane; thence by aforesaid direct line to Chapelizod-bridge on the River Liffey, and by the left bank of the Liffey to the ferry at foot of Knockmaroon-hill; thence by the road over that hill to the Knockmaroon-gate of the Phœnix Park; thence by the Park wall to Ashtown Lodge, at the rere of the Under Secretary's house, and by the most direct road thence to Longford-bridge on the Royal Canal; thence by the most direct road to Tolka river, and by that river to Convent wall, opposite Glasnevin Cemetery, and by west side of said wall to Finglas-road, North, at Harburn Lodge, and by the left of said road, Naul-road (and Claremont to rere of Glasnevin House), to Glenavon House, thence along north side of fence across the fields to the boundary line between the townlands of Hampstead and Drishogue, and by said boundary line and wire fence between Hampstead and Albert Model Farm to a point about 200 yards from gate lodge entrance to Albert Model Farm, on Drumcondra-road; thence in a direct line to ash tree marking City boundary, on right of avenue leading to Hampstead, and across said avenue to and by the left of hedge to Whitehall; thence by the left to Drumcondra-road to a point opposite entrance to Broom-hill; thence by the right of Drumcondra-road to northern end of Charlotte-place; thence across field by said hedge to the cross fence; thence in a northerly direction by said fence to opposite Pucks-town-road; thence across the fields to Puckstown-road, along said road for about fifty yards to stone pillars on said road; thence across fields by hedge on right to cross fence and said fence in an easterly direction to opposite Artane Lodge; thence by fence to the left to Puckstown-road, across said road and field to stream there; thence by the right of and along said stream to Donnycarney-bridge, Malahide-road, across said road, and along fields on right bank of said stream to within about 100 yards of Killester-lane; thence by right hand side of fence to the left to the stone pillars on Killester-lane, near gate lodge of Killester Abbey; thence along Killester-lane to Howth-road, along Howth-road to the three-mile stone; thence by Castle-avenue and Merville-avenue to "Woodville," Vernon-avenue; thence across fields and by hedge to back gate at St. Anne's, along hedge to right to gate lodge; thence across fields in St. Anne's to the Nannikin River, and by said river to Sea Wall, Dollymount Strand, along said sea wall to Annesley-bridge, and thence by sea line to the lighthouse at North Wall.

Division.—The Dublin Metropolitan Police District is divided into six divisions, viz. A B C D E F, each under the charge of a Superintendent. The number of Inspectors, Sergeants, and Constables in the Force varies according to the extent of the Divisions and other circumstances. Divisions are divided into Sub-divisions each containing a station-house. Sub-divisions are divided into Sections each under the charge of a Sergeant, and Sections are divided into beats which are patrolled by the Constables.

* Note.—If there be any discrepancy between the foregoing statement of the boundary and the description of it given in the Acts quoted above, the description shall prevail.

The A and B Divisions occupy the portion of the City south of the Liffey from the Estuary of the Dodder at Ringsend to the Chapelizod Bridge on the Liffey, thence in a direct line to Blackhorse Bridge on Grand Canal, and thence by the Grand Canal to the Grand Canal Basin, at the Estuary of the Dodder, Ringsend.

The A and B Divisions are separated by a line from Portobello Bridge, through Richmond-street Camden-street, Wexford-street, Redmond's-hill, Peter's-row, Whitefriar-street, Great Ship-street, Castle Steps, Castle-street, and Fishamble-street to the Liffey.

The C and D Divisions occupy the portion of the District lying north of the Liffey between the Nannikin River, Dollymount, and the Ferry-boat Station on the Liffey at foot of Knockmaroon-hill. They are separated by a line from Grattan Bridge, through Capel-street, Bolton-street, Dorset-street, and Drumcondra-road, to Whitehall, Upper Drumcondra-road.

The E Division occupies the portion of the District south of the Grand Canal and the Liffey, between the Blackhorse Bridge on the Grand Canal and the Railway Gates at Merrion Strand. It embraces the Urban Districts of Rathmines and Pembroke.

The F Division occupies the portion of the District between the Railway Gates at Merrion, by the sea coast to a point two furlongs south of the southern wall, Killiney. It embraces the Urban Districts of Blackrock, Kingstown, Dalkey, and part of Killiney and Ballybrack.

Divisional boundaries in all cases run along the middle of the streets, &c., mentioned.

FIFTIETH REPORT.

ANNUAL REPORT of Major A. G. Ferguson, His Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary for Scotland, for the Year ended 31st December 1907. General Report.

GENERAL REPORT.

To the Right Honourable John Sinclair,
Secretary for Scotland.

Bellwood, Perth, N.B.,
21*st March* 1908.

Sir,

I have the honour, in compliance with the 65th Section of 20 and 21 Vict. cap. 72, to submit the Forty-ninth Annual Report on the state and efficiency of the Constabulary and Police forces in the counties, cities, and burghs in Scotland, for the year ended 31st December 1907. Introductory.

During the past twelve months I have duly inspected the 31 county constabulary forces, and the 32 city and burgh police forces, in addition to the head-quarters, the principal, divisional, and sectional stations, and all new and altered stations. Annual Inspection.

I recommend that certificates of efficiency be granted to 31 county, and to the 32 city and burgh forces, as shown in Tables 1 and 2. Certificates of Efficiency.

The following counties are so far united as to have only one chief constable, viz.: Selkirk, Berwick, and Roxburgh; Mid, West, and East Lothian, and Peebles; Fife and Kinross; Renfrew and Bute. United Counties.

The changes authorised during the year, as shown in Table 10, have resulted in an increase of 18 in county, and 35 in city and burgh forces, giving a total increase of 53, which make the present authorised strength 1,945 in county forces, or 1 to 1,196, and 3,550 in city and burgh forces, giving 1 to 676; the total authorised force being 5,495, which gives 1 to 860 of the population. If the 226 additional police, who are privately employed and paid, are added, the total in counties will be 2,014, or 1 to 1,155; in cities and burghs 3,707, or 1 to 647; giving a grand total of 5,721 constables, or 1 to 825 of the population, excluding the Orkney and Shetland Islands. Authorised Strength.

The large number of small separate police establishments is the same as last year. It is difficult to report a number of these forces as thoroughly efficient, because they are neither so effective nor so generally useful as they would be if forming districts or divisions of larger forces. It would add considerably to the efficiency and decrease the cost of the police if the local authorities of these small forces could see their way to joining with other forces as opportunity occurs. Small Separate Forces.

Of the 31 county forces, there are 7 with less than 20 men, 5 being in counties of under 20,000 inhabitants. Of these 7 forces, 1 has less than 10 men, and 4 of the 7 are in counties of under 10,000 population.

Of the 32 cities and burghs maintaining separate forces, there are 12 with less than 20 men in each, 11 of these 12 being in towns having populations of under 20,000.

General Report.

Burghs Policed by Counties.

There are at present 27 burghs with populations ranging from 2,134 to 41,000 policed by counties, as shown in Tables 8 and 9. Of these, 19 are police districts of counties, and 8 burghs, with over 7,000 inhabitants each, which are consolidated with their respective counties in terms of Sections 58, 59, & 61 of 20 & 21 Vict. cap. 72 Police (Scotland) Act, 1857.

Detective Staff.

Much more attention is now given to the detective branch of the service, the advantage of having expert officers for this duty being recognised. At present there is an authorised Detective Staff of 209 officers in 14 county and in 18 city and burgh forces, the staff in the former being 9 inspectors, 16 sergeants, 3 detective officers, 10 detective constables—total, 38; in the latter, 4 superintendents, 2 lieutenants, 19 inspectors, 4 sub-inspectors, 7 detective clerks, 15 sergeants, 73 detective officers, and 47 detective constables—total, 171. A General Criminal Investigation Department for Scotland, working from a central office, would be of the greatest service in the prevention and detection of crime.

Criminal Registry.

The Criminal Registry kept at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, Perth, Greenock, Ayr, Dumfries, Stirling, Elgin, and Inverness works very satisfactorily in supplying the police with valuable information regarding habitual criminals. Every year the necessity for the establishment of a central authority to direct criminal investigation is more clearly shown. If a criminal, who is not on licence, moves out of a police area, he is completely lost sight of until he is again apprehended. When certain classes of crime are committed much valuable time is lost, which would not be if the exact whereabouts of certain criminals were known.

Reserve Force.

There is a reserve force of 108 men—42 in 23 county forces and 66 in 5 city or burgh forces. It is desirable to have a small reserve force in all forces for general duty, and to take the places of those absent from duty from sickness or any other cause.

Additional Police Force.

In Table 7 are shown the additional police who are privately employed and paid, and for whom the Government Grant is not received, but whose services are available in case of emergency. They all wear uniform, and are under the orders of the chief constables, by whom they are appointed, and come under the provisions of the Police (Scotland) Act, 1890. There are 69 in counties, 157 in cities and burghs—in all 226.

Army, Navy, and Reserve.

Of police constables on the authorised strength at 31st December 1907 there were 383 who have served in the Army, 130 are still in the Army Reserve, and 10 have served in the Navy, and 6 are in the Naval Reserve. It is undesirable that the Police should serve in the Naval Reserve, the Militia, or the Volunteer forces, as the annual periods of training take them away at the very time when their services may be most required.

Variations.

In Table 6 is given the number of changes that have taken place, viz., by death, 32; by resignation, 344; by retirement on gratuities, 16, and superannuation, 74; by dismissal, 56; by desertion, 2; by discharge, 4; by transference, 24;—total, 552.

Frequent Resignations.

The large number of resignations is caused principally by young men fond of a change, who have joined other better paid forces, or who have sought to better their prospects elsewhere. Of the 344 resignations, 26 were compulsory, 2 resigned to join English forces, and 4 were discharged as unfit for the service.

General Conduct and Discipline.

On the whole, the general conduct has been good, and the necessary discipline has been maintained.

Promotions and Appointments.

The promotions and advancements appear to have been carefully made; and the recruits inspected are, on the whole, a satisfactory body of young men.

Some Local Authorities, with a desire to reduce local taxation, cause chief constables and other police officers to perform a variety of extra duties such as procurator-fiscal, sanitary inspector, fire-master, etc. The discharge of these offices is very likely to interfere with the due and efficient performance of the primary police duties, and the practice should therefore be discouraged. There are, however, duties which may be usefully performed by the police in some jurisdictions, as, for example, inspection under the Explosives, Food and Drugs, and the Diseases (Animals) Acts, and assisting the Inland Revenue officers, and the officers of the Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and Animals. The police are also required to aid local Authorities in the execution of the Public Health Act by intimating nuisances. General Report.

Books, Forms, Records, &c., are well kept and up to date. Books, &c.

In Tables 1 and 2 are set forth the general cost, pay, clothing, &c. The total amount for pay and clothing for the authorised county constabulary, including the burghs policed by counties, is £163,492, 2s. 2d.; for the city and burgh police, £307,732, 8s. 11d. The total amount for the whole authorised force for pay and clothing is £471,224, 11s. 1d. General Cost, Pay, Clothing, &c.

The aggregate cost of the police force, excluding the additional police, together with the rent, taxes, building, and all other expenses, amounts to £217,903, 7s. 0d. in counties, and to £363,303, 6s. 3d. in cities and burghs, giving a grand total of £581,206, 13s. 3d.

The average annual pay per man in a county is £80, 5s. 1d., that in a city or burgh, £82, 6s. 0d. Including pay and clothing, the former is £84, 2s. 10d., and the latter £86, 2s. 5d., giving a general average of £81, 10s. 11d. for pay, and £85, 15s. 1d. for pay and clothing. Average Pay per Constable, &c.

All the forces are now, wholly or in part, paid on the Government "Model" Scales. It is to be regretted that, when adopting these rates of pay for the lower ranks, the chief constables and the superior officers were in so many instances debarred from participation in these prospective benefits. Forces Paid on the Government Model Scales.

On the whole, the material, make, and pattern of the uniforms and clothing inspected are satisfactory, and the prices within the Government maximum rates, and generally reasonable. Mounted men should always be provided with pants and jack-boots. In one county force knickerbockers and puttees have been usefully provided. It is desirable to have the clothing issued earlier in the year. Uniforms and Clothing.

During the past year 12 new stations have been provided, and alterations have been effected on 17 others. The new stations are very satisfactory, affording suitable accommodation for married and single men, as well as providing offices, charge rooms, and well constructed cells with the latest improvements. The small sub-stations erected in the suburbs of the city of Aberdeen, and burgh of Paisley, and the telephone signal boxes adopted in the cities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Dundee, and burgh of Greenock, are very serviceable, and should be adopted in other large towns. Where single men are quartered in barracks, it is desirable to adopt the cubicle system in order to give as much privacy as possible. Due attention is being paid to the sanitary arrangements, heating, ventilation, and the security of prisoners. By degrees the Authorities are replacing the most unsatisfactory stations with new ones, and improving others as far as may be; but it will be some time yet before they can all be brought up to the standard of modern requirements. Police Stations, Offices, Cells, &c.

As offices or charge rooms have not been provided at some of the older county stations the business has to be transacted in one of the officers' dwelling rooms, which are frequently few in number, and this arrangement is often very inconvenient when the family is large or when there is sickness in the house; and a number of the old county cells are so badly placed or constructed that they are a nuisance to the officer's family, and particularly so when there are living rooms adjoining to or over the cells, and when prisoners have to be taken in by the house door; and communication can, in too many instances, be carried on between prisoners in the cells and from the outside through the imperfectly protected windows; and a number of these old cells are damp and cold owing to imperfect foundations and drainage, or from defective or insufficient heating and ventilation, and from neglecting the necessary periodical repairs.

Instead of allowances for cleaning offices and cells, the system of granting free houses appears to be more satisfactory; and the plan in some forces of supplying paint, &c., for ordinary periodical repairs, to be executed by the men themselves, seems to be a good and useful one.

The necessity for providing proper police accommodation has been frequently brought before the Local Authorities concerned, and it should be understood that if a force is not provided with suitable stations, houses, offices, and cells, where they are required, it may, on that account, be considered so far inefficient, because it is impossible to carry out the work effectually in defective, inadequate, and unsuitable premises.

Quarters for Married and Single Officers. Rented Houses.

The excellent plan of providing quarters for as many married and single men as possible at important stations should be encouraged. Care should be taken, for obvious reasons, that the rented houses provided for the others are suitable, affording at least three living-rooms and separate sanitary conveniences. All premises occupied by the police should be kept clean and tidy, and, in fact, be model dwellings.

Unnecessary Association in Cells.

Association of prisoners in cells should be avoided wherever possible; every available cell should be occupied before prisoners are confined together.

Two prisoners died in the cells.

Plans of New Stations, &c., in Burghs should be approved by the Secretary for Scotland.

It is most desirable that legal powers should be given to Local Authorities to acquire suitable sites for police buildings, and that provision be made that plans and specifications for the erection of new police buildings, alterations to old, or converting premises intended for police purposes in cities and burghs, be submitted, as in the case of counties, for the approval of the Secretary for Scotland.

Licensed Premises.

As shown in Table 18, the total number of licences in county licensing jurisdictions is 4,010, which gives 1 to every 465 of the population. In city and burgh licensing jurisdictions 6,771, or 1 to every 422 of the inhabitants. In Scotland (omitting the Orkney and Shetland Islands) there are at present 10,781 licensed premises, or 1 to every 438 of the estimated population.

Pedlars' Certificates.

There were 2,754 pedlar certificates granted in counties, and 3,261 in cities and burghs, total 6,015; this represents a sum of £688, 10s. in counties, and £815, 5s. in cities and burghs, and a total sum of £1,503, 15s., which goes towards the Superannuation Funds under the Police Act, 1890.

Greater Efficiency.

In recent years the greater efficiency and more general usefulness of the police has been attained by—

(1) The provision for Superannuation, made by the Act of 1890, which, however, might be amended in several respects.

(2) The augmentation of numerically weak forces; the provision of a small but useful reserve in county, city, and burgh forces; and the appointment of detective officers and plain-clothes constables in the larger forces.

(3) The adoption of improved scales of pay, based on the principle of the official "Model" Scales, which provide for periodical increments after fixed terms of approved service.

(4) The supply of better and more suitable uniforms, and the adoption of a patrol serge uniform for general duty in lieu of the old cloth tunic, helmet, &c.

(5) The erection of new and the improvement of old police stations, offices, and cells where required, and the increased attention paid to the suitability of the rented houses provided.

(6) The facilities granted in all the counties and most burghs for the use of bicycles by officers on duty.

General Report.

(7) The extension of telephonic communication; the telephone is in use in 26 counties and all the cities and burghs.

(8) The issue of a "Police Manual," with appendix, as prepared by a Committee of Chief Constables, to which is added the general orders for each force, making the whole a most useful book of instruction and guidance for every constable.

(9) Instruction in simple drill formations, which should, however, always be uniform throughout the service; and the ambulance instruction, now given to 4,755 men in all the forces. Instruction in swimming has been found beneficial, especially in towns where there are docks and much shipping. A number of forces have also been most usefully instructed in baton and physical drill, which should be encouraged, and be more generally adopted.

(10) The gradual adoption of a regulation requiring chief officers of police to wear uniform. The chief constables of 14 county and 30 city or burgh forces are now so provided. In counties 17 chief constables and 103 of all ranks, in cities and burghs 18 chief constables and 178 of all ranks are mounted when required.

(11) The introduction of the early closing of licensed premises, which enables the police to give more undivided attention to the very important duty of patrolling and watching earlier in the night.

(12) The provision in some Town forces of noiseless boots for night duty.

(13) The detection of crime and tracing former convictions is facilitated by means of the finger print system, and the system is gradually being made more use of.

Greater Effectiveness attainable.

In my opinion greater effectiveness and more general usefulness of the police would be attained—

(1) By reducing the large number of small separate police establishments.

(2) By providing greater facilities for transfer of men from one force to another.

(3) The rules regarding age on promotion might with advantage be modified or abolished altogether; men who have passed the age limit for promotion, with yet many years of service before them, are under the present conditions liable to lose zeal, and are contented to get through the remaining years quietly. In many forces promotion is so slow that many officers, well worthy of advancement, fail to obtain promotion on account of their age.

(4) More encouragement might be given to old soldiers to join, by permitting men above the rank of corporal to join as first-class constables.

(5) By extending the telephone as far as possible to all the important police stations so as to give continuous communication and so very much reduce indoor and clerical work. And also by further adopting in large towns small Sub-stations, and the telephone box signal system.

(6) By providing vans in large towns for conveying constables to or from distant beats, and for bringing in prisoners.

(7) By regular periodical exercise of the men in simple drill formation, which should be uniformly the same for all forces, so that they may be able to act together in order when massed, or when in conjunction with another force. The baton and physical drill exercise as carried out in several forces should be more general, as it would be found very serviceable. A larger number should receive ambulance instruction, and this most useful knowledge should be kept up by periodical attendance at classes and lectures. The usual ambulance kit should be provided at the principal stations.

(8) By holding periodical examinations of the men as to their knowledge of police duties.

(9) By having detective officers in most forces for criminal work, and abolishing the practice, where it still exists, of sheriff officers taking charge of criminal cases.

(10) By having a reserve in proportion to the strength, to provide men in some degree trained to fill vacancies, to provide for sickness and leave of absence. The plan adopted with success in Lanarkshire of enrolling police pensioners to assist the permanent force in cases of emergency might be followed with advantage.

General Report.

(11) By providing bicycles where they are found of service. This mode of travelling enables constables to visit their beats oftener, and to be visited themselves more frequently by their superior officers.

(12) By keeping in some of the larger and more important forces a few trained men and horses, with equipment and saddlery, in order that the mounted police may be more serviceable.

(13) By making more use of the "London Police Gazette for England" for publishing Scottish criminal informations.

(14) By providing all the city and burgh police with noiseless boots for night duty.

(15) The practice of permitting junior officers to perform duties such as procurator-fiscal, which takes them from the immediate jurisdiction of their chief constable, is to be deprecated.

(16) If, on receipt of resignations, usually two or three months before the date of retirement, chief constables were permitted to at once enlist recruits as probationers, forces would benefit, as a man partly advanced in his police education would be available when the vacancy took place.

(17) It would seem advisable that steps should be taken to cope with the large number of tramps, vagrants, and professional beggars in Scotland. According to the half-yearly census taken by the Scottish police in June 1906, there were 9,474 vagrants at large, 1,650 of whom were children under 14 years of age; and in June 1907 there were 9,255 vagrants, of whom 1,609 were children. A large proportion of these are offenders, who beg and commit petty thefts and cause considerable damage by fires when they lie out about stackyards and out-houses at night; they might also be a ready means of spreading smallpox and other infectious diseases. This is a national question, and isolated efforts by local authorities could not succeed. If a scheme of labour colonies could be devised for the adults, with industrial schools for the children of these vagrants, the question of expense should not be great, if, indeed, in the end it might not prove an economical measure, for there would be a large economy in prison and police accounts. Great expense is now incurred in prosecuting, escorting, and maintaining in prison offenders of these classes, and much of the county constables' time is occupied in watching and dealing with them. One might include in the same category and for the same treatment loafers in towns, some of whom are continually in and out of poorhouses, and often in prison for petty offences.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,

A. G. FERGUSON, Major,

His Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary for Scotland.

Remarks.—The force, giving only one officer to 1,500 of the population, appears to be somewhat numerically weak, considering the increased court and clerical work in the populous and important burghs policed, but it is considered sufficient by the authorities, and no complaints are received on the subject.

Report.—The force is efficient.

The burgh of Campbeltown is consolidated with the county, and pays £486, 0s. 10d. per annum, the county providing one station (the disused prison) with 14 cells legalised for 14 days, in charge of a constable, who has a free house, &c., and whose wife receives £18 per annum as matron. The burgh provides the other police office with 3 cells, and a house for the married constable in charge. The extended burgh of Oban is formed into a separate police district, the county provides police buildings, cells, etc., and the burgh pays the county £500 partial cost, made up annually. The number of cells at Oban is insufficient.

Variations.—Two constables were dismissed and 7 constables resigned—total, 9.

Promotions.—Nil.

Extra Duties.—The chief constable is chief inspector under the Explosives and Diseases Animals Acts, and billet-master; two superintendents, 3 inspectors, 10 sergeants, and 7 constables are assistant inspectors of explosives; the whole force are inspectors under the Diseases Animals Acts; a superintendent and an inspector are billet-masters, all without extra allowances.

Police Stations.—There are 15 stations with 2 to 15 cells at each, in all 73 cells; 14 county, 1 burgh, also 4 stations without cells, county property.

The Telephone.—Not introduced; it might be with advantage at Dunoon.

Mounted on Bicycles.—Twenty-four of all ranks use their own, and the inspector, a sergeant, and 1 constable receive each an allowance of £2 per annum for upkeep. Most of the beats are very large, and it would be advantageous to encourage a greater use of bicycles by granting allowances to a larger number of the force.

Ambulance Instruction.—Two superintendents, 3 inspectors, 10 sergeants, 48 constables, total 63, have been instructed.

Pedlars' Certificates.—76 granted, being an increase of 20.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act are enforced. Bye-laws under Section 57 of the Local Government Act, 1889, for the prevention of vagrancy have been framed, but are in abeyance owing to a decision of the High Court of Justiciary.

Remarks.—The force is likely in time to lose its present efficiency if steps are not taken to adopt scales of pay similar to those in neighbouring police forces; the county is becoming a recruiting and training ground for the better paid forces.

Report.—Subject to these remarks, the force is efficient.

County Police Assessment.—2⅝d. in the £. Burgh of Irvine, 2¼d. in the £.

Burghs.—With the exception of Ayr and Kilmarnock, which maintain separate establishments, all the burghs and populous places are policed by the county.

Variations.—One sergeant died, 11 constables resigned; 4 constables retired on pensions, and 2 constables transferred to other forces—total, 18 changes.

Promotions.—One constable to sergeant.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The deputy chief constable, 5 superintendents, 6 inspectors, and 2 detective officers are inspectors under the Explosives Acts; the senior officer at each station is billet-master; and 38 officers are inspectors under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts.

Police Stations.—There are 25 county stations with from 2 to 15 cells, total 92 cells. The stations are generally suitable, and those recently constructed or altered are very satisfactory. There are 39 rented houses provided. Allowance for cleaning offices and cells varies from £1 to £9, 12s. per annum.

The Telephone.—The following are connected:—Chief constable's residence and Head Quarter Office and County Buildings, Ayr, Ardrossan, Beith, Cumnock, Dalry, Irvine, Kilwinning, Kilmarnock, Largs, Newmilns, Stewarton, and Troon stations, and with the Glasgow Circuit at an annual cost of £92, 15s., and with other places at the usual trunk rates.

Mounted Constables.—On special occasions the chief constable and deputy chief constable, 1 inspector, 4 sergeants, and 4 constables, in all 12, are mounted on hired horses, and saddlery provided by the county for 6 mounted men.

Bicycles.—The chief constable, 4 superintendents, 5 inspectors, 20 sergeants, 101 constables—total, 131—provide their own machines, and an annual allowance of £50 is divided amongst them for upkeep; and 168 can ride bicycles.

COUNTY OF AYR—continued.

County of Ayr.

Drill.—The force is drilled in "threes" instead of the usual drill in "fours."

Ambulance Instruction.—The chief constable, 5 superintendents, 8 inspectors, 26 sergeants, 114 constables—total, 154—have been instructed. A silver challenge cup has been presented for annual competition between teams. The annual competition took place last April, and the cup was won by a team from the Irvine section.

Pedlars' Certificates.—204 granted, being a decrease of 8.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act are strictly enforced. A society has been established since 1885 for the repression of professional vagrancy and the supply of relief to destitute wayfarers. It would seem to meet a want in the country, as the Poor Law does not admit of relief being given to able-bodied persons or their dependants.

Remarks.—Nil.

Report.—The force is efficient.

County Police Assessment.—2·98d. in the £.

Burghs.—All the burghs are policed by the county, and assessed as above.

Variations.—One sergeant and 2 constables resigned, 1 inspector retired on pension Total, 4 changes

Promotions.—One sergeant to inspector, 2 constables to sergeant.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—All are inspectors under the Explosives Acts. The chief constable, superintendent, inspector, and 3 sergeants are inspectors under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act and Food and Drugs Act, but with no extra allowance.

Police Stations.—There are 17 stations with cells, 10 county, 1 burgh, and 6 rented property, with from 2 to 13 cells at each, in all 51 cells. New stations at Portgordon, Aberchirder, Cornhill, and Tomintoul are in progress. Cells might be added with advantage at Craigellachie and Glenlivet. Officers in charge of stations pay 1s. 6d. a week rent, two constables live rent free at head quarters, the remainder find their own houses. Five shillings a week is allowed for cleaning offices at head quarters, £3, 4s. per annum each for Keith and Buckie, and actual outlays not exceeding 10s. per annum for other stations with cells. The 11 cells in the disused prison at Banff, which are legalised for 14 days' detention and imprisonment, are in charge of a married constable who has free quarters, &c., and his wife, as matron, receives £5, 5s. per annum.

The Telephone.—The chief constable's house, the constabulary office, the legalised cells, and the Exchange at Banff are connected, and with Macduff, Keith, Buckie, Portsoy, Cullen, Newmill, and Dufftown at an annual cost of £34.

Mounted on Bicycles.—All ranks can ride, and an annual allowance of 30s. each is given to 6 men for upkeep, and when on special duty an allowance is granted to others, who have bicycles, the amount that otherwise might be incurred by fares, &c.

Ambulance Instruction.—The deputy chief constable, the inspector, 3 sergeants, and 17 constables, total 22, have been instructed.

Pedlars' Certificates.—121 granted, being an increase of 7.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act are enforced.

Remarks.—The force, giving only 1 officer to 1662 of the population, is numerically weak, and there are a number of important burghs and populous fishing villages to police, the court and clerical work in the former having very much increased of late years; provision should be made for sickness and absence on leave. One of the constables is never available for general duty, being keeper of the legalised cells, an appointment frequently held by a retired police officer. More allowances for upkeep of bicycles would be advisable. Model scales of pay might with advantage be adopted for the chief constable, superintendent, and inspector.

Report.—The force is efficient.

County Police Assessments.—1$\frac{5}{4}$d. in the £.

Burghs.—All the burghs are policed by the county, and assessed at the same moderate rate.

Variations.—One sergeant clerk died, 2 constables resigned, 1 constable retired on pension, the superintendent transferred to Kirkcudbrightshire as chief constable.

Promotions.—One office sergeant from Roxburghshire to superintendent and D.C.C., 1 constable to sergeant clerk.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable is chief inspector, assisted by the superintendent, under the Explosives, the Weights and Measures Acts, and the Contagious Diseases, and the superintendent has £20 for the Weights and Measures.

Police Stations.—There are 11 stations, all county property, with 2 to 6 cells at each, in all 27 cells; and there are 9 rented houses provided; the 4 cells at Duns are legalised for 14 days' detention and imprisonment, and are in charge of a resident married constable, who has a free house, &c., and whose wife, as matron, receives £7, 10s. per annum. All live rent free, unmarried men pay 1s. when provided with quarters, or 2s. per week allowed for lodgings. The officers in charge at Coldstream, Lauder, and Eyemouth each receive £1, 19s. per annum for cleaning offices and cells.

The Telephone.—Has not yet been introduced in the county; when it is the principal stations should be connected.

Mounted.—The chief constable in uniform on special occasions.

On Bicycles.—The deputy chief constable, the inspector, 3 sergeants, 20 constables, total 25, none provided; section officers allowed 20s. per annum for upkeep, and an allowance of 3d. per double mile allowed when on special duty to others.

COUNTY OF EDINBURGH—continued. County of Edinburgh.

County and Burgh Police Assessments.—County, 1 1/4 8/8d. in the £. Musselburgh, 2¼d., Dalkeith, 2½d., each in the £.

Burghs.—With the exception of the city of Edinburgh and the burgh of Leith, all the burghs and populous places in Mid-Lothian are policed by the county. The burgh of Musselburgh is consolidated with the county, and under agreement pays the actual cost of the police supplied, receiving back the Government Grant thereon; the offices, cells, and the officers' quarters are provided by the burgh. Dalkeith is a separate police district, and the police buildings are provided by the county.

Promotions.—Nil.

Variations.—One constable died, 3 constables resigned, one constable dismissed, and 1 constable transferred to West Lothian—total, 6 changes.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable is chief inspector, and 2 inspectors sub-inspectors under the Explosives and Petroleum Acts, and the latter receive £5 each per annum. The inspector at Musselburgh has £25 per annum as Burgh Procurator-Fiscal. One inspector has £12, 10s. per annum as a sanitary inspector. All ranks are officers under the Diseases Animals (for which £25 is allowed), and the Shop Hours Acts.

Police Stations.—There are 28 stations with from 2 to 4 cells at each, total, 61 cells, 17 are county, 2 burgh,and 9 rented property, and as regards stations without cells, 3 are county property, and 19 rented; there are also 8 rented houses provided. The superintendent has a free house at head quarters, and at the burgh stations quarters are provided for married and single officers, for which they pay 1s. per week, and when not in quarters unmarried men are allowed 3s. each per week. Officers and constables in charge of stations with cells get an allowance of 20s. to 50s. yearly for cleaning.

The Telephone.—The head-quarters office and the chief constable's residence are connected with the Exchange, Leith, Haddington, Dalkeith, Loanhead, and Musselburgh at an annual cost of £49 10s.; and with Peebles, Linlithgow, and other stations and public call offices at the usual Trunk line rates.

Ambulance Instruction.—The deputy chief constable, 7 inspectors, 2 detective officers, office sergeant, 6 sergeants, 52 constables, total 69, have been instructed.

Mounted Police.—The chief constable, deputy chief constable, 3 inspectors, 1 sergeant, 10 constables, total 16, are mounted on special occasions, and saddlery provided; with the exception of the chief constable, they are mounted on hired horses.

Bicycles.—The chief constable, deputy chief constable, 6 inspectors, 2 detective officers, 3 sergeants, and 56 constables, total 69, are mounted on bicycles, and an allowance of 18s. each per annum is granted for upkeep.

Pedlars' Certificates.—71 granted, being a decrease of 4.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act, and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act, are enforced; and Bye-laws for the prevention of vagrancy under Section 57 of the Local Government Act, 1889, have been framed and approved by the Secretary for Scotland, but the High Court of Justiciary have decided that they are ultra vires of the powers of the County Council.

Remarks.—The chief constable has also charge of the Lothians and Peebles constabulary, which appears to be a very satisfactory arrangement. The conjoined forces would be more effective if the chief constable had power to transfer officers from one force to another irrespective of age.

Report.—The force is efficient.

CITY OF EDINBURGH—continued. City of Edinburgh

City Police Assessment.—2·863d. in the £.

Variations.—Two constables died; 1 lieutenant and 29 constables resigned; 1 inspector, 3 sergeants, and 4 constables were pensioned; 3 constables retired on gratuity; 1 constable dismissed; 2 constables transferred to other forces—total, 46 changes.

Promotions.—One inspector to lieutenant, 2 sergeants to inspectors, 15 constables to sergeants.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The superintendent at Portobello has £45 per annum as prosecutor ad interim in the burgh police court. The practice of allowing junior officers to hold offices not directly under the chief constable is to be deprecated.

Police Stations, Offices, Cells, &c.—There are 4 divisional stations and 10 sub-stations, with from 2 to 37 cells at each, in all 88 cells. The 37 cells at the central, or head-quarter station, are legalised for 3 days' detention or imprisonment, in charge of 3 male and 4 female turnkeys. Five superintendents, 3 sergeants, and 6 constables have free houses or quarters at their stations; 1 inspector, 4 sergeants, and 24 constables residing at the station houses pay from 3s. to 5s. each per week house rent. One male prisoner died while in custody, after full enquiry no blame attached to the police. A new station has been finished at Stockbridge, and a new one is in progress in Torpichen Place.

The Telephone.—The police stations, the chief constable's residence, the Telephone Exchange, General Post Office, the Museum of Science and Art, and fire stations, are connected at an annual cost of £253, 5s. 0d. Forty-eight call-boxes have been provided in various parts of the city, and found of the greatest service.

Detective or Criminal Investigation Department and Staff.—At the chief or central station there is a separate criminal investigation department, and a detective staff, consisting of a lieutenant in charge, 2 inspectors, 4 sub-inspectors, 2 sergeants, 5 clerks, and 6 detective officers, and 9 plain-clothes constables, total 29.

Ambulance Instruction.—The whole force instructed, except the recruits.

Mounted Police.—The chief constable in uniform, 3 inspectors, 3 sergeants, and 38 constables, total 45, on special occasions, and saddlery is provided for 10 officers.

Bicycles.—Five bicycles are provided.

Band.—One sergeant and 18 constables form a very good pipe band, which increases the popularity of the force, and does not interfere with duty and efficiency.

Pedlars' Certificates.—277 granted, being an increase of 15.

Vagrants, &c., convicted of Begging.—Males 367, females 18, total 385, being a decrease of 2.

Sheriff Officers.—Take charge of criminal cases at certain stages in the proceedings. The police should have the full charge and responsibility from the commencement to the end of all such cases; as the practice has ceased in the county, there appears to be no reason why this procedure should be continued in the city, which could be obviated by having certain officers sworn as sheriff officers.

Report.—The force is efficient.

Burgh Police Assessment.—2$\frac{5}{6}\frac{5}{4}$d. in the £.

Variations.—One constable died, 8 constables resigned, 3 constables dismissed, 1 sergeant and 1 constable retired on pension, 1 constable retired on a gratuity—total, 15 changes.

Promotions.—One constable to sergeant.

Police Stations, Offices, Cells, &c.—The police offices at the Town House, with 19 cells, are well arranged and suitable, and there is a resident female turnkey, who has a free house on the premises; and sub-station, with offices and 4 cells, at Newhaven, and houses for several married men, all very satisfactory.

The Telephone.—The chief constable's, and police surgeon's residences, and the stations are connected, and with the Edinburgh Police offices and Exchange at a cost of £30, 15s. per annum.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable receives £50 per annum as burgh procurator-fiscal, and £100 for having charge of the Marine Police division. He is also inspector under the Explosives and Petroleum Acts, inspector of lighting, and billet-master.

Ambulance Instruction.—The whole force, including the harbour police, has been most usefully instructed.

Pedlars' Certificates.—13 granted, being a decrease of 17.

Vagrants, &c., convicted of Begging.—Males 3, females 0, total 3, being the same as last year.

Sheriff Officers.—Take charge of criminal cases at certain stages in the proceedings. The police should have charge of all such cases from the commencement to the end; and, as this practice has been discontinued in the county, there appears to be no reason why it should be continued in this burgh.

Remarks.—It would be beneficial for quarters to be provided for a certain number of married and single men as near as possible to the principal station, in order that a body of police could be readily obtained in an emergency. The majority of the men can swim and are encouraged to do so; this is found specially useful for those on dock duties.

Report.—The force is efficient.

County Police Assessment.—1·69d. in the £.

Burghs.—With the exception of Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy, which maintain separate police establishments, all the royal and police burghs, and a number of populous mining and fishing villages, are policed by the county.

Variations.—Three constables died, 1 sergeant and 17 constables resigned, 1 constable retired with a gratuity, 1 constable dismissed—total, 23 changes.

Promotions.—One constable to sergeant.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable as inspector under the Diseases of Animals Acts receives £40 per annum, the deputy chief constable, 4 inspectors, and 13 sergeants are assistant inspectors, and given allowances according to the time employed in each case. The deputy chief constable and 3 inspectors receive £1 to £3 each per annum as inspectors under the Explosives Acts.

Police Stations.—There are 34 stations, with from 2 to 6 cells, in all 89 cells, 27 are county, 4 are burgh property, and the remainder are rented, and there are 43 rented houses provided. Six cells in the disused prison, Dunfermline, are legalised for 14 days' imprisonment, before, during, or after trial, and are in charge of a resident married constable, who has a free house, &c., and his wife an allowance of £12 per annum as matron. A good new station has been completed at Anstruther; at Leven there are 4 new cells and charge-room, the house attached has been done up; at Methil 3 new cells are added and charge-room improved. The superintendent and inspectors pay 2s., sergeants and constables 1s. each per week house rent; various allowances are granted, from £2 to £10 per annum, for cleaning cells and offices.

The Telephone.—The chief constable's residence, and the head-quarter office at Cupar, St. Andrews, Dysart, Dunfermline, Newport, Leven, Cowdenbeath, Burntisland, Leslie, Lochgelly, Auchtermuchty, Kelty, Methil, Markinch, Tayport, Inverkeithing, Elie, Pittenweem, St. Monance, Anstruther, sub-station at Cowdenbeath, and legalised cells at Dunfermline are usefully connected at an annual cost of £153, 8s. 5d.

Mounted on Bicycles.—Practically all can ride, and of these, 93 who use their own on duty receive an allowance of £2 each per annum for upkeep, and there are 4 bicycles provided, one for each divisional head quarters.

Mounted Police.—The chief constable, an inspector, 2 sergeants, and 6 constables could be mounted on special occasions.

Ambulance Instruction.—The chief constable, the deputy chief constable, 4 inspectors, 2 clerks, 12 sergeants, and 75 constables, total 95, have been instructed.

Pedlars' Certificates.—161 granted, being a decrease of 25.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act are enforced. Bye-laws under Section 57 of the Local Government Act, 1889, for the prevention of vagrancy have not been framed.

Remarks.—The population appears to be steadily increasing, chiefly in the Dunfermline and Dysart divisions. Notwithstanding recent additions to the force, the average number of population to each constable has not been materially lessened. However, the telephone has been greatly extended, and bicycles are extensively used, all of which make the duties of the force lighter. As new stations are being built, and when work at the new Naval Station at Queensferry is commenced, an addition to the force would seem desirable.

Report.—The force is efficient.

County Police Assessment.—1·547d. in the £. Carnoustie, 2·227d.; Kirriemuir, 3·267d.; and Monifieth, 2·407d. in the £.

Burghs.—Arbroath, Brechin, Broughty-Ferry, City of Dundee, Forfar, and Montrose maintain separate police establishments, an unusually large number, and most certainly on the public grounds of greater efficiency, more general usefulness, and economy (with the exception of the City of Dundee), there should be only one police force in the county.

Variations.—Two constables resigned, and one constable transferred to Dundee City.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable for prosecuting in County Courts, and the Burgh of Kirriemuir, receives £15 per annum, and he is inspector under the Explosives Acts. All ranks are officers under the Contagious Diseases Animals Act.

Police Stations.—There are 12 County stations with from 2 to 17 cells at each, in all 44 cells, and 12 rented houses provided. At the head quarters at Forfar there are residences provided for the chief constable, and a constable who has charge of the cells legalised for 14 days' detention and imprisonment, his wife as matron receiving £26 per annum. The chief constable pays a rent of £35 per annum; superintendents 4s. 8d., inspectors 3s. 6d., sergeants 2s. 11d., married constables 2s. 4d., unmarried constables 1s. 9d. each per week; and officers and constables renting houses at higher rates than these have the excess paid to them. Officers in charge of stations with cells receive from 20s. to 60s. per annum for cleaning, &c. Many of the men's houses are too small, having only 1 bedroom. The County station at Dundee wants better lighting and general doing up.

Bicycles.—All ride, an allowance from 20s. to 40s. each per annum is allowed to those who use their own on duty for upkeep.

The Telephone.—The head quarters, Arbroath, Brechin, Baldovie, Carnoustie, Downfield, Dundee, Fintry, Kirriemuir, and Monifieth stations are most usefully connected, at an annual cost of £5 5s. each per annum, the usual Trunk rates paid on messages to other places.

Ambulance Instruction.—The chief constable, the deputy chief constable, 3 inspectors, 7 sergeants, 38 constables, total 50, have been instructed, this comprises the whole force, which is very satisfactory.

Pedlars' Certificates.—19 granted, being a decrease of 5.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act are enforced. Bye-laws for the prevention of vagrancy, under the 57th Section of the Local Government Act, 1889, have been framed, but not yet sanctioned.

Remarks.—Nil.

Report.—The force is efficient.

City Police Assessment.—3·16d. in the £.

Variations.—One inspector died; 13 constables resigned, 2 compulsorily; 5 constables retired on pension—total, 19 changes.

Promotions.—One detective officer to inspector, 1 sergeant to detective, and 1 constable to sergeant.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable is procurator-fiscal in the City Police Court, and is also billet-master but receives no extra salary, but he has £100 per annum for taking charge of the Harbour police, and £10 per annum as prosecutor under the Licensing Act, 1903. An inspector receives £3, 3s. per annum as inspector under the Explosives Acts, and 6 inspectors are inspectors of lighting.

Police Stations, Offices, Cells, &c.—There are 5 stations, with offices, and with from 5 to 34 cells at each, in all 57 cells. Ten additional cells are in progress at the Central station. Two cells would be an improvement at the Harbour police station; the Harbour trustees pay for hire of vehicles to drive prisoners to a station with cells. The superintendent (deputy chief constable), 3 inspectors, and 10 married officers are provided with houses at the several stations; these, with the exception of the superintendent, who has a free house, pay from 2s. to 3s. 9d. per week house rent; female turnkeys are employed at each station, and are paid from 8s. to 20s. a week.

The Telephone.—The chief constable's residence and all the stations are in telephonic communication, at an annual cost of £79, 7s. 9d.; also with Edinburgh, Glasgow, Perth, and other places, at the usual Trunk rates. Five telephone signal-boxes have been erected in the city, and are connected with the Central Police Station.

City of Dundee.

Ambulance Instruction.—Eight superintendents, 7 inspectors, 14 detective officers, 4 clerks, 23 sergeants, 143 constables, total 199, including the Harbour police, have been instructed. Two ambulance waggons are in regular use, and found most beneficial.

Remarks.—Gymnastics are taught in a public gymnasium by efficient instructors at an annual cost of £25. Swimming is encouraged, and the Town Council pay for special facilities in the use of public baths; 210 hold swimming certificates. The School Board have given special opportunities for members of the force to attend classes.

Report.—The force is efficient.

Burghs.—All the burghs are policed by the county.

Promotions.—Nil.

Variations.—Nil.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The whole force are inspectors under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, with a total allowance of £15; 4 inspectors are billet-masters; the chief and deputy chief constable and 3 inspectors are inspectors under the Explosives Acts, the deputy chief constable receiving £6, 2s. per annum, 2 inspectors each £3 per annum and 1 £2, 2s. per annum; and an inspector is fire-master with fees for each turnout.

Police Stations.—There are 9 stations, 7 county, 1 burgh, and 1 rented property, with from 2 to 18 cells at each, in all 40 cells, and there are 6 rented houses provided. The station house at Dunbar belonging to the County, where there were 2 disused cells, has been altered to provide accommodation for an inspector, one married and one single constable. Dunbar burgh police office is old, inferior, and unsuitable, and new buildings are required. The disused prison at Haddington provides dwelling-houses for the superintendent, 1 married and 2 unmarried constables, and there are 18 cells available for county and burgh prisoners, which are legalised for 14 days' detention before, and 5 days after trial, and in charge of a resident acting sergeant, whose wife receives £5 per annum as matron, and a free house, &c. The deputy chief constable has a free house, the rest pay 1s. per week house rent, and single men have 2s. to 3s. each per week for lodgings.

Ambulance Instruction.—The deputy chief constable, 3 inspectors, the detective and office sergeants, 1 sergeant, and 24 constables, in all 31, have been instructed.

Mounted.—The chief constable, deputy chief constable, and 2 constables on special occasions, equipment being provided by the county and horses hired.

Mounted on Bicycles.—Thirty-one of all ranks, and £30 per annum allowed for upkeep.

The Telephone.—The head quarters, Dunbar, North Berwick, Gullane, and Tranent with the Edinburgh district at a cost of £25 per annum, and Trunk rates.

Pedlars' Certificates.—60 granted, being an increase of 11.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act, and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act, are enforced. Bye-laws for the prevention of vagrancy, under the 57th Section of the Local Government Act, 1890, have been framed, and approved by the Secretary for Scotland, but are not in force owing to a decision of the High Court in a Mid-Lothian case.

Remarks.—The chief constable has also charge of the counties of Mid and West Lothian and Peebles, which appears to be a very satisfactory arrangement. Could transfers be permitted irrespective of age, it would be a great benefit, especially where counties are joined together under one chief constable.

Report.—The force is efficient.

County Police Assessment.—2·580d. in the £.

Burghs.—With the exception of Inverness, which maintains a separate force, all the burghs and populous places are policed by the county, and assessed at the above rate.

Variations.—One constable died; 1 sergeant and 2 constables retired on pension.

Promotions.—One constable to sergeant.

Mounted Men.—The chief constable is mounted on any special occasion, but not in uniform.

Bicycles.—The whole force can ride bicycles, and several use their own on duty, two bicycles are provided at Inverness, and an allowance made of 1d. a mile to those who use their own, and hires paid when required on special duty.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable is chief inspector under the Explosives and Weights and Measures Acts; the superintendent and 4 inspectors are inspectors under the Explosives Acts, the superintendent receiving £5 per annum as such; 3 inspectors as inspectors under the Weights and Measures Acts receive £5 each per annum, and 1 inspector £12 per annum. All are officers under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act. Three inspectors have each £20, and a sergeant £10 per annum as court-house keepers, and free houses, &c.

Police Stations.—There are only 15 county stations, with from 2 to 6 cells at each, in all 42 cells, in this very large and scattered county. Ten of these cells, 2 at Carrbridge, 2 at Aviemore, 2 at Fort Augustus, 2 at Castlebay, and 2 at Loch Corsdale, are temporary cabin cells, all constructed on approved plans; and on the 13th November, as from the 13th October 1899, the Secretary for Scotland re-licensed the use of these cells for a further period of two years. Carrbridge and Campeltown have been improved by the introduction of wash-houses, &c. Portree requires a muster-room and suitable office; there is plenty of ground available for the requirements. Cannick, Isleorsay, and Dunvegan should be brought up to date with water, coal-sheds, wash-houses, &c. The police cells at Fort-William, Lochmaddy, and at Portree are legalised for 14 days' detention and imprisonment, and are in charge of inspectors, who have free houses, &c., and £10 each per annum is allowed to the matrons. In addition to the 14 stations with cells, there are 5 county, and 24 rented houses provided, for which the following deductions are made for rents, viz.:—Superintendent 2s. 6d., inspectors 2s., sergeants 1s. 6d., constables 1s. each per week.

The Telephone. — The head-quarter office and the chief constable's residence at Inverness are in telephonic communication with the Exchange and the burgh police office, and Fort William police station at an annual cost of £17, 10s.

Ambulance Instruction.—The chief constable, deputy chief constable, 2 inspectors, 5 sergeants, and 22 constables, total 31, have been instructed.

Pedlars' Certificates.—83 granted, being an increase of 2.

Report.—The force is efficient.

Calculated County Police Assessment.—For Lower, Middle, and Upper Wards, $2\frac{1}{1}\frac{0}{2}\frac{5}{0}$d. in the £.

Police Districts Assessment.—Hamilton district, $2\frac{1}{1}\frac{0}{2}\frac{4}{0}$d.; Motherwell Burgh district, $2\frac{1}{1}\frac{0}{2}\frac{9}{0}$d.; Lanark district, $1\frac{1}{1}\frac{1}{2}\frac{6}{0}$d.; Airdrie district, $3\frac{2}{1}\frac{9}{2}\frac{9}{0}$d.; Lower Ward district, $3\frac{5}{1}\frac{2}{2}\frac{2}{0}$d.

Burghs.—Airdrie, City of Glasgow, Coatbridge, Govan, Hamilton, and Partick maintain separate police establishments. All the remaining burghs and populous places are policed by the county. The burghs of Rutherglen and Wishaw have consolidated agreements with the county, and levy their own assessments. The burgh of Rutherglen provides the police office and cells. The county provides the stations, office, and cells at Lanark and Wishaw. The burghs of Rutherglen and Wishaw, in terms of their several agreements, pay to the county £825, and £686 per annum respectively. These county and burgh consolidated police systems work most efficiently, and are at the same time more economical than separate forces would be. If these burghs maintained their own separate police forces they would require to be very much stronger numerically than under the present arrangement, as now, when additional strength is likely to be of service, it is always available and readily furnished by the county, and the normal strength in the burghs can thus be safely maintained at a minimum. The efficiency and general usefulness of the police would be increased, at a less cost, if the burghs of Airdrie and Hamilton were likewise consolidated with the county. The burgh of Motherwell is formed into a separate district, policed by the county, assessed at $2\frac{1}{1}\frac{0}{2}\frac{9}{0}$d. in the £, and provides the police station house, &c. There are 4 other separate districts, viz., the Upper Ward, the Hamilton, the Airdrie, and the Lower Ward, in addition to the burghs situated therein.

COUNTY OF LANARK—continued.

Reserve.—There is a reserve of 3 recruits in training; but a reserve force of about 40 men has been wisely and most usefully formed, composed of volunteer pensioned constables resident in the county, who will, when called out, receive 8s. per day travelling expenses, and will be provided with part-worn uniform of the force.

Variations.—Eighteen constables resigned, 1 constable retired on pension, 1 constable was discharged, 6 constables dismissed, and a superintendent transferred to Stirlingshire as chief constable—total, 27 changes.

Promotions.—One inspector to superintendent, 1 sergeant to inspector, 1 constable to sergeant.

Mounted Force.—The chief constable and deputy chief constable, 3 superintendents, 3 inspectors, 1 detective officer, 7 sergeants, 14 constables, total 30, can be mounted on special occasions; they go through the riding school parade drills annually and arrangements are made for obtaining suitable hired horses, fully equipped, at short notice. Providing mounted men has been found of great service on particular occasions.

Mounted on Bicycles.—The chief constable, 6 superintendents, 8 detective officers, 7 inspectors, 32 sergeants, 148 constables, total 202, and 85 allowances of 30s. each per annum are granted for upkeep.

Ambulance Instruction.—The chief constable and deputy chief constable, 4 superintendents, 7 detective officers, 9 inspectors, 34 sergeants, 203 constables, total 259, have been instructed.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable is chief inspector, without allowances, under the Explosives and Diseases of Animals Acts; 6 superintendents and one inspector receive in all £77 per annum as inspectors under the Explosives Acts; the deputy chief constable and 6 superintendents receive in all £35 per annum under the Diseases of Animals Acts; a superintendent £2 as billet-master; and 2 constables £15 as School Board officers.

Police Stations.—There are 44 stations with cells, 4 of which are rented, 2 burgh and 38 county property, having from 2 to 9 cells at each, in all 131 cells, and generally providing suitable offices, cells, &c., and quarters for married officers, and barracks for single men at Shettleston, Larkhall, Wishaw, Rutherglen, and Motherwell; there are also 119 rented houses provided. Two new cells built at the station at Quarter. When houses are provided, married officers pay—superintendents 5s., inspectors 3s., sergeants and constables 2s., and unmarried constables in furnished barracks 1s. each per week. Officers in charge of stations with cells are allowed from 1s. to 20s. per week for cleaning.

The Telephone.—There are 23 connections, the annual cost being £178, 10s.

Pedlars' Certificates.—350 granted, being an increase of 83.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act are enforced, and bye-laws framed for the prevention of vagrancy under the 57th Section of the Local Government Act, 1889.

Sheriff Officers.—In the Lower Ward, including the suburbs of the city of Glasgow, sheriff officers take over charge of criminal cases at certain stages of the proceedings. The police should have the entire charge of such cases from the commencement to the end.

Report.—The force is efficient.

Variations.—1 sergeant and 10 constables died; 117 constables resigned, 15 compulsorily; 2 sergeants and 8 constables retired on gratuities; 1 detective inspector, 3 sergeants, and 20 constables were pensioned; 21 constables were dismissed for misconduct; 1 constable deserted; 3 constables transferred to County forces; total, 187 changes.

Promotions.—One detective officer to detective inspector; 6 constables to sergeant; and 4 detective constables to detective sergeant.

City of Glasgow

Police Reserve.—There are 56 constables in the different divisions, who, having no fixed beats, are available to fill vacancies and replace men absent from duty, on leave or sick list.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable, 10 divisional superintendents, and 25 lieutenants can prosecute in the police courts, but have no additional salary. The chief constable, 9 superintendents, and a lieutenant are inspectors under the Explosives Acts, and a lieutenant is billet-master.

Police Offices, Cells, Houses, Barracks, &c.—The city is divided into 9 divisions, and there are in all 16 stations, with the requisite offices, &c., and from 3 to 68 cells at each, in all 326 cells, and quarters for 79 married and 149 unmarried officers, who pay—married officers from £3 to £20 per annum, and single men 1s. 9d. each per week. Fourteen telephone signal boxes are usefully placed in the extended suburbs. Vans have been provided for taking prisoners to the stations. Improvements have been carried out in the Western, Northern, St. Rollox, and East Clyde Street stations, chiefly by increasing the accommodation for the detective staff; at St. Rollox a new muster room has been added, and five new cells have taken the place of old ones; in East Clyde Street station cubicle rooms for 17 single constables and a house for a married inspector have been built. One male prisoner died in the police buildings during the year; and after full inquiry no blame attached to the police.

The Telephone.—The chief constable's residence, all the police and fire stations, and 14 signal boxes are in communication with each other and with the Exchange. The annual cost for maintenance is £439, 11s. 3d., and the ordinary Trunk charges for messages beyond the city circle.

Ambulance Instruction.—Five superintendents, 15 lieutenants, 57 inspectors, 57 detective officers, 88 sergeants, 1014 constables, total 1236, have been instructed.

Mounted Police.—The chief constable, 3 superintendents, 6 inspectors, 37 constables, total 47, are mounted on special occasions. Seven horses are kept permanently and used for van work and mounted duties.

Bicycles.—Are provided for 4 detective officers, 1 inspector, and 1 constable.

Band.—The force has an excellent band, consisting of 34 constables, which does not interfere with the men taking their regular turn of day duty, and adds very much to the popularity of the force.

Pedlars' Certificates.—1037 granted, being a decrease of 69.

Vagrants, &c., convicted of Begging. — Males 153, females 39, total 202, being a decrease of 32.

Sheriff Officers.—Take over charge of criminal cases at certain stages of the proceedings. This most responsible duty should be attended to and carried out from the commencement to the end by the police officers specially selected and appointed for the purpose.

Remarks.—A certain number of men resign annually on account of town life not suiting them; if permitted to transfer, irrespective of age, to other forces, the loss of many good men would be saved.

Report.—The force is efficient.

County Police Assessment.—2¼d. in the £.

Burghs.—All the burghs are policed and provided with suitable stations by the county, and assessed at the above rate.

Variations.—Six constables resigned, 1 inspector retired on pension, 2 constables dismissed.

Promotions.—One constable to detective sergeant.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable is, without allowance, chief inspector, the deputy chief constable and an inspector receive £5 each as sub-inspectors under the Explosives and Petroleum Acts; all ranks act as officers of the local authority under the Diseases Animals Act; and the section officers act as inspectors under the Shop Hours Act, 1892.

Police Stations.—There are 13 county stations, with from 2 to 6 cells at each, in all 40 cells, with suitable quarters for married and single men. Inspectors, sergeants, and constables each pay 1s. per week house rent, single men receive 3s. lodging money.

The Telephone.—Head quarters, Bathgate, Bo'ness, Broxburn, Queensferry, Whitburn, and Fauldhouse have been connected with the Edinburgh Exchange at a cost of £45 per annum, Trunk rates elsewhere.

Ambulance Instruction.—The deputy chief constable, 3 inspectors, the detective sergeant, the office sergeant, 5 sergeants, 46 constables, total 57, hold the St Andrew's certificate; in addition all the additional constables have been instructed.

Bicycles.—The chief constable, the deputy chief constable, 3 inspectors, the detective sergeant, office sergeant, 5 sergeants, and 36 constables are mounted on bicycles when necessary, and allowed 20s. to 30s. each per annum for upkeep.

Pedlars' Certificates.—99 granted, being an increase of 9.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act are enforced. Bye-laws for the prevention of vagrancy, under Section 57 of the Local Government Act, 1889, have been framed, approved, and were in force, but found inoperative, owing to a decision of the High Court in connection with an appealed case from Mid-Lothian.

Remarks.—The chief constable has also charge of the adjoining counties of Edinburgh (Mid-Lothian), Haddington (East Lothian), and of Peebles, which appears to be a very satisfactory arrangement. It would be of the greatest assistance to the police force generally, and especially in counties joined together under one chief constable, if transfers were permitted irrespective of age.

Report.—The force is efficient.

COUNTY OF PEEBLES—continued. County of Peebles.

County Police Assessment.—1$\frac{34}{48}$d. in the £.

Burgh.—The county town of Peebles is policed and assessed at the above rate.

Variations.—One constable transferred to Mid Lothian and 1 constable transferred to West Lothian.

Promotions.—Nil.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The superintendent and deputy chief constable receives £18, 8s. per annum as inspector of weights and measures for the county; the chief constable is chief inspector and the superintendent is sub-inspector of Explosives, for which the latter receives £2, 10s. per annum, and also £2, 2s. per annum as billet-master, and the whole force are officers under the Diseases Animals Acts.

Police Stations.—There are 4 county stations, with 2 to 6, in all 13 cells. The police station at head quarters, with offices and 6 cells, and quarters for the superintendent, sergeant, and married constables, are satisfactory. There are also 2 temporary corrugated iron cells attached to the station house at Broughton. The superintendent has a free house, all others pay 1s. each per week rent, and unmarried men receive 3s. per week for lodgings.

The Telephone.—The head quarters station and Innerleithen are connected with the Exchange at an annual cost of £15.

Ambulance Instruction.—The deputy chief constable, office-sergeant, a sergeant, and 7 constables have been instructed.

Mounted Police.—The chief constable and deputy chief constable, on special occasions.

Bicycles.—The chief constable, deputy chief constable, a sergeant, office-sergeant, and 10 constables can ride, and an annual allowance of 20s. to 30s. each for upkeep to those who use their own on police duty.

Pedlars' Certificates.—43 granted, being an increase of 1.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act, and the 15th Section of the Crimes Act, are enforced. Bye-laws for the prevention of vagrancy, under the 57th Section of the Local Government Act, 1889, were framed, approved, and adopted, but the decision of the High Court of Justiciary in a Mid-Lothian case have made them appear to be ultra vires of the powers of the County Council.

Remarks.—The chief constable has also charge of the Lothian Constabulary forces, which appears to be a very satisfactory arrangement; it would add to the general efficiency, and especially where counties are under one chief constable, if all ranks could be transferred irrespective of age.

Report.—The force is efficient.

COUNTY OF PERTH—continued.

County Police Assessment.—1·509d. in the £.

Burghs.—With the exception of the city of Perth, which maintains a separate force, all the burghs are policed by the county.

Variations.—One constable died and 1 constable retired on pension ; total, 2 changes.

Promotions.—One sergeant to detective sergeant, 1 constable to sergeant.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable is inspector under the Explosives Act, but has no extra allowance. The whole are officers under the Diseases Animals Acts, and the Food and Drugs Act.

Police Stations.—There are 30 stations, with from 2 to 5 cells at each, in all 68 cells, 23 of these are county property, and 7 are rented, and there are 28 rented houses provided. Three cells have been added at Rattray. The disused prison at Dunblane is used for police purposes, and affords suitable quarters for married officers, offices, and 12 cells, 10 of which are legalised for 14 days' imprisonment. There are suitable offices and 3 cells at the head quarters at Perth, and a free house, &c., for the resident married officer in charge. The rented stations at Bridge of Earn and Muckhart are not all that could be desired, but when the leases terminate the necessity for new stations will be considered. A new station at Dunning is in progress. The resident married officers in charge of stations and cells at the headquarters at Perth, Blairgowrie, and the legalised cells at Dunblane, and at Alyth, Coupar-Angus, Doune, and Crieff, have free houses. Of the remainder, married men pay 1s. each a week rent for houses provided, and unmarried men are allowed 2s. each a week for lodgings.

The Telephone.—Has been introduced connecting the head-quarter office, chief constable's residence, Blairgowrie, Dunblane, and Crieff, with great advantage, at an annual cost of £38, 10s., messages beyond being at the usual Trunk rates.

Remarks.—Nil.

COUNTY OF ROSS AND CROMARTY—continued. Ross and Cromarty.

County Police Assessment.—3·271d. in the £.

Burghs.—Cromarty, Dingwall, Tain, and Stornoway are policed, and are assessed at the county rate, and the stations are provided by the county.

Variations.—One constable died; a superintendent and a sergeant retired on pension, a constable was dismissed.

Promotions.—The detective inspector to superintendent, a constable to sergeant.

Extra Duties and Allowances.—The chief constable receives £15 as chief inspector under the Weights and Measures, and the Explosives Acts. The deputy chief constable is a sub-inspector of weights and measures and receives £25. The inspector at Tain receives £25, and the sergeant at Cromarty £11, 10s. per annum, as court-house keepers. All members of the force are inspectors under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act.

Police Stations.—There are 14 county stations, with from 2 to 3 cells at each, in all 30 cells, and 9 county and 14 rented houses without cells are provided. The Stornoway station has been improved. Four cells in the disused prison at Dingwall are legalised for a period of 14 days' detention or imprisonment, before, after, or during trial of prisoners, and are in charge of a constable who has a free house, &c., and his wife receives £15 as matron. All ranks, except the chief constable and the deputy chief constable, pay 1s. 6d. each per week as station house rent, but when private houses are rented over £3, 18s., the excess not exceeding £3 is supplemented by the county. The superintendent at Stornoway and the inspector at Tain are each allowed £6 per annum for cleaning and heating offices and cells, the sergeant at Invergordon £2, 12s. per annum, and others in charge of stations with cells £1 per annum for the same purpose.

Bicycles.—38 of all ranks can ride, a bicycle is usefully provided at head quarters, 18 use their own and receive an annual allowance of 20s. each per annum for upkeep.

The Telephone.—The head quarter office with the Exchange at Dingwall for £5 per annum.

Ambulance Instruction.—The chief constable, the deputy chief constable, a superintendent, 1 inspector, 5 sergeants, and 22 constables, total 31, have been instructed.

Pedlars' Certificates.—48 granted, being a decrease of 3.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act is enforced. Bye-laws have been framed for the prevention of vagrancy, under Section 57 of the Local Government Act, 1889, but are inoperative, owing to a decision of the Court of Session in a Mid-Lothian case.

Remarks.—The strength as to area and population is given for the authorised force, but for some time the force has been 3 under strength, so the actual number to the acre is 1 to 38,645 and 1 to 1,469 of the population; however, this number appears sufficient, and has the advantage that in cases of emergency additional men can be added at once.

Report.—The force is efficient.

County Police Assessment.—Owners 1·660d., occupiers ·580d.—total, 2·40d.

Burghs.—All the burghs are policed and stations, &c., provided by the county. Stranraer pays quota of £178, other burghs the same as the county.

Variations.—One constable resigned, 1 constable discharged.

Promotions.—Nil.

Extra Duties.—The chief constable is chief inspector under the Explosives Act, and the whole force inspectors under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, one inspector receives £1, 10s. per annum. The inspector at Wigtown receives £5 per annum as sanitary inspector. One sergeant as inspector under the Food and Drugs Acts receives £1 per annum.

Police Stations.—There are 13 county stations, with from 2 to 4 cells, in all 31 cells, and 7 rented houses without cells provided. The disused prison at Wigtown is the headquarter police station, where there are 4 cells legalised for 14 days' imprisonment, before, during, and after trial, in charge of a resident office sergeant, whose wife, as matron, receives £11, 10s. per annum. Newton-Stewart appears to be now a more central and convenient place for the headquarters of the force. In the old prison at Stranraer 4 cells have been taken into use and police offices provided, the constable in charge receives £6 for cleaning, &c.; three cells are still available in the County Buildings if required. Except the chief constable, all ranks live rent free. A large number of the station houses want attention. The principal defects are (1) Sanitary arrangements; (2) Heating arrangements for cells; (3) Damp houses and cells; (4) Communication between cells through gratings. These are now being taken in hand.

Telephonic Communication.—None. The principal stations would be usefully connected as soon as the system is introduced into the county.

Mounted on Bicycles.—The chief constable, the deputy chief constable, 3 sergeants, and 14 constables, total 19, on their own bicycles, towards the purchase of which an allowance of £10 to the deputy chief constable, and £5 each to sergeants and constables, has been made, to cover the first three years, after which allowances of £1 to £2 will be given for upkeep. The chief constable has an annual allowance of £2 for the upkeep of his own bicycle. One bicycle is provided by the county.

Ambulance Instruction.—The superintendent, the inspector, 4 sergeants, and 14 constables, total 20, have been instructed.

Pedlars' Certificates.—68 granted, being an increase of 1.

Vagrants.—The Trespass Act is enforced, but the 15th Section of the Crimes Act is not. Bye-laws for the prevention of vagrancy, under the 57th Section of the Local Government Act, 1889, have been adopted, but are not enforced, owing to the decision of the High Court of Justiciary in an appealed case from Mid-Lothian.

Report.—The force is efficient.
